THE CAVALIER'S LOVE.

AFTER THE STYLE OF CHARLES I.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

My love has large and noble eyes,
Of noon and midnight born;
And when they droop and when they rise
They mock the eve and morn;
And morn grows pale and eve grows dark
With envy of their shade and spark.

My love has such a voice the birds
Learn from her how to sing;
And men mistake her pretty words
For their "sweet jargoning;"
And he who hears her every day
Lives in a land of endless May.

My love has such a face, it seems
That Psyche and she are twins;
Her beauty would haunt Abaddon's dreams,
And lure him from his sins;
For, gazing on that heaven of love,
The fiend would seek to soar above.

Her heart—but that I cannot see;
What if she's false as fair?
A creature of mere coquetry,
To laugh at my despair.
Suppose it. No, I can't suppose
A serpent's venom in a rose.

THE JEWELED GARTER:
A THRILLING MIDAIR INCIDENT.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY JAMES WIGHT.

A dozen or more years ago afternoon promenaders on Broadway and evening habitues of the theatres were in the habit of patronizing and admiring a handsome young girl who sold flowers. Conscious of her good looks, she was endowed with a stinging tongue and an abundant stock of audacity. Knowing hardly more of her origin than Nell Gwynne knew of hers, she bore a strong resemblance, her patrons fancied, to that wayward Queen of Hearts. So pretty, so piquante, so "sassy" was Zaire the flower-girl that she began at fifteen to attract a great deal of attention—evil as well as good. Among others, the proprietor of a big circus combination had his attention attracted to her. After some badinage, which he intensely relished, Zaire condescended to talk with him. With refreshing candor she admitted that she could neither read nor write; she could sing when she liked and as she liked; she had no memory that she knew of, and she utterly hated the sight of a newspaper or a printed book.

"You are a very well-formed girl, and a very good-looking girl, and a very strong girl, Zaire," quoth the circus-man.

Saucily nodding in response to the two first assertions, she asked as to the last:

"How do you know I'm strong?"

"I saw you lift a basket of bananas from the ground to a woman's head last Tuesday."

"You did, eh? Well, that wasn't much."

"Wouldn't you like to be dressed up in silk and gold and ostrich feathers, and become a 'star' in a circus?"

"Are you trying to gimme taffy, old man? 'No!' Well, then, I'd like it first-rate. How much will you pay me? What am I to do? Sail round on a horse?"

He bade her call round at his office in the morning, when an arrangement was perfected by which Zaire accompanied the combination during its Summer tenting season. She rode a curveting steed in the public procession, and she performed some iron-jaw feats in the arena, exhibiting her supremely handsome figure, and the following Winter she took to the trapeze and accomplished wonders. Afterwards she made a tour of the country with a variety show, and her name was paraded on the posters with the customary hypertrophied adjectives. She continually kept improving in her business, introducing feats on the high trapeze of extraordinary daring. When she was in her twentieth year she was engaged at the Paris Hippodrome at a large salary. Without exhibiting much appearance of bulk or of extraordinary muscular development, she was pronounced by competent judges to be perhaps the strongest woman in the world. Regarded from an æsthetic point of view, there were few handsomer women then living, whether as regarded face or physique.

"What was she like?"

Well, she was a delicious little, or rather medium-sized, rowdy, and provokingly pretty. It is certain that she possessed a medium complexion, because people said that her face changed from light to dark like an April day. Some of her admirers pronounced her a darkish blonde, while others said she was a fair brunette. It is sufficient to say respecting her eyes that they hovered somewhere between Mazarine blue and royal purple, and that they scintillated "sass."

But her lips! There was no diversity of opinion about them; nor of the mouth itself, with its cleft-cherry shape. The tender hue of the monthly-rose slept on her cheek. Her nose was a problem—neither Grecian, Roman, Hebraic, nor retrousse; but a sort of combination feature that expressed scorn, approval, ambition, perseverance, energy and unscrupulousness not common among womankind in general, but characteristic of those Cleopatras of the race who use the necks of men as stepping-stones.

As we have already stated, she was a delightful rowdy, and when she was up in the trapeze, tying hers if into knots, wriggling like a python, dropping in dreadfully sensational ways from blood-curdling heights, her whole body—legs, ankles, arms and elbows—coruscated with deviltry. She flew into the arena with a hop, step and jump, like an untamed colt of the Sierras. The feuilletonists of Paris said little about her performance, but waxed eloquent about herself. "She abounds in vim," "Mlle. Zaire is brimful of chic." "She is impregnated with nervous energy," were specimens of the phrases applied to her. An American gentleman who witnessed with delight the performances of Zaire said she was "a splendid specimen of muscular cussedness."

But before she sailed from New York a critic from his exalted seat in the Old Bowery summed her up eloquently in a single phrase:

"Hay, now, Strawberry," he shouted to a red-headed acquaintance engaged in munching peanuts, "aint she gallus?"

Yes, "gallus" is the only word that conveys an idea of the vivacity, freedom, don't-care-a-cuss spirit of her performance, so surcharged was it with what might have been vital quicksilver.

When she had been three weeks in Paris she formed a business connection with a French athlete, gymnast and trapezist. The double-acts of the pair were of the most thrilling and sensational character, and nightly brought down the house. The bills of the day designated M. Gaston and Mlle. Zaire "the wonderful steel-muscled trapezists."

M. Gaston was the beau-ideal of an athlete. With the form of the Farnese Hercules, his frame was built on the model that combines strength with agility. His skin was remarkably clear, and smooth and satin-like, and the sinuosities of which his body was capable suggested a snake. There was something rather snake-like, too, in his restless, small, glittering eye. With all its brightness, no self-respecting woman could have met his glance without a feeling of aversion. However, Zaire looked not without approval on the chestnut curls clustering round the low, white forehead, and the neck like a tower of marble.

Presently, pictures of Zaire and Gaston were distributed throughout the French capital. It is needless to add that both trapezists were represented in the dress, or rather undress, of the arena. The pictures enhanced the fame of Zaire, and bouquets and billet-doux began to flow into her professional life. M. Gaston had neglected no opportunity to reiterate his most ferocious affection. Becoming wildly jealous, he began to energetically object to the compellation "Zaire." He deemed it a superfluity. He longed to abolish it by a legal ceremony. He yearned to merge it into the ancient Gallic patronymic Gaston.

"'The wonderful steel-muscled pair, M. and Mme. Gaston, in their extrordinary sensational performance,'" he said to her one day, "would look better on the bills."

"I am of a contrary opinion," she answered; "at all events, if we are to marry each other, wait till we get a big bank-account, and can afford to keep a carriage. I shall never be happy till I can drive through Central Park in my own carriage. 'Where is Central Park?' Why, in New York, of course."

While M. Gaston fumed and grumbled, Zaire's salary received generous accretions. She began to wear diamonds and to drive along the boulevards and in the parks in a basket-carriage. When she appeared in the Hippodrome she was arrayed in golden tissues that clung to her exquisite curves like sunbeams. Great was the homage she received; tremendous were the plaudits she evoked as she swung through the air in this burnished airiness on the flying-trapeze. Indeed, one of the vivacious feuilletonists christened her "The Flying Venus of Milo," in reference to her sunbeam tights manufactured in that ancient city.

All this dress, and ostentation, and diamonds and homage was gall and wormwood to Monsieur Gaston. He coaxed and reproached her alternately. He accused her of growing habits of dissipation, and declared that her flesh was not so firm nor her muscles so steel-like as they had been. Then, with crocodile-tears in his eyes, he would declare that some day or other she would slip her hold and both their brains would be dashed out. To all of which she listened with impatience—sometimes reviling and sometimes kissing him.

There was a change in the bill, and M. Gaston made his first appearance before a Parisian audience in his great cannon-ball act. In this wonderful exhibition of skill combined with muscular strength the French athlete shone to immense advantage. His figure was a study for an artist, and his very walk—light, smooth, noiseless—resembled that of a lion of the forest traversing the floor of its cage. His performance with the cannon-balls was sunned by the smiles of some of the loveliest women of Paris, and when one evening a wealthy young Spanish lady with an equivocal reputation was so overcome with admiration that she threw a jeweled cest to the athlete a tremendous flutter was created in the Hippodrome.

Gallantly picking up the sparkling zone, he carried it to his lips, amid the deafening plaudits of the vast audience.

Three minutes later, when Mlle. Zaire saw him, he had assumed an amusing air of patronage and condescension.

"Mlle. Zaire," said he, "behold—ah—my trophy; a princess of Castile threw it to me in the arena."

"The brazen hussy!" said Zaire, firing up; "she has more cheek than a mule; give it to me!"

"Pardon, mademoiselle," placing the jeweled cest on his arm; "not unless you accede to one inexorable condition——"

"And that is?"

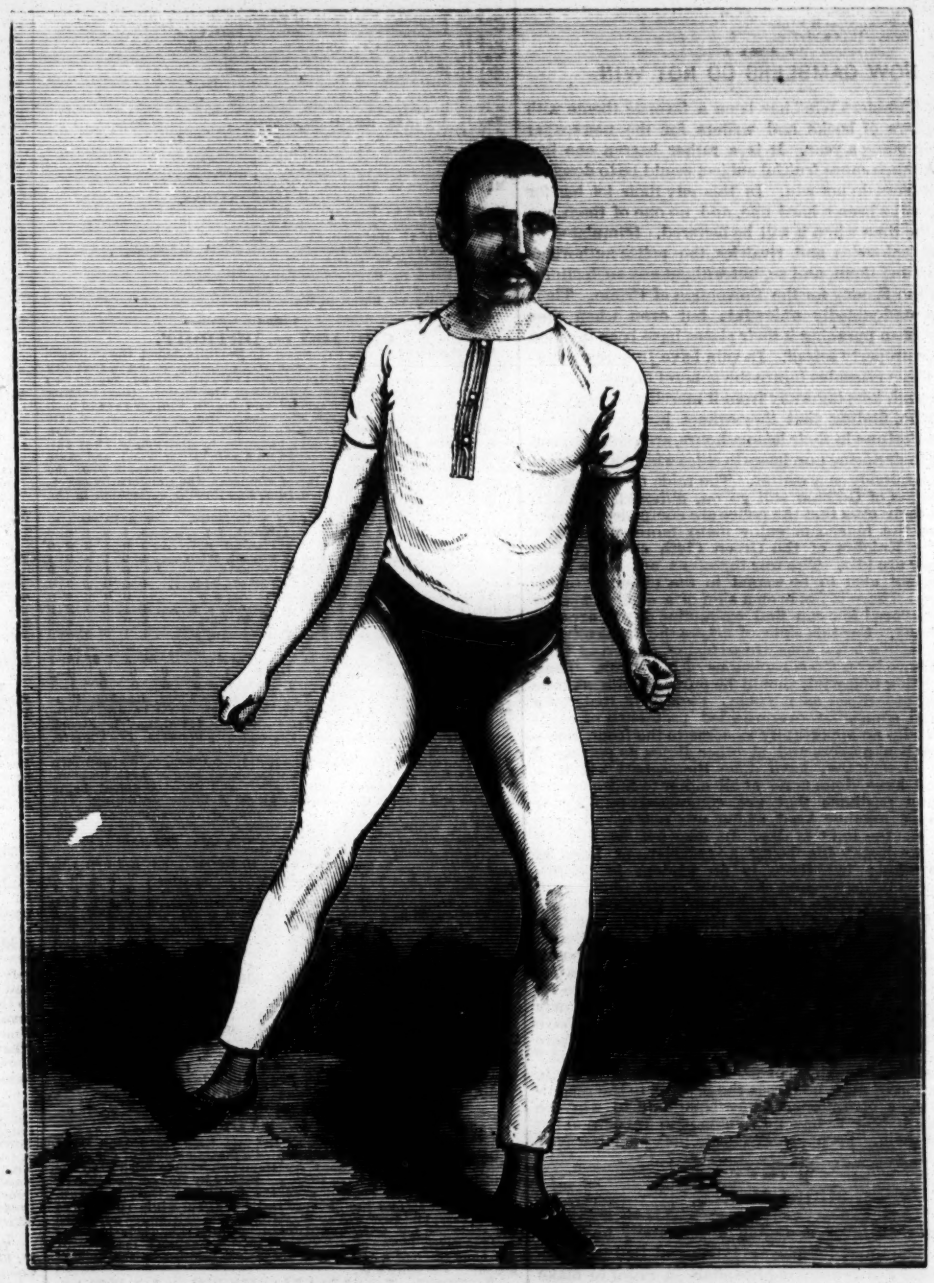
"That you will be married to me to-morrow."

"Marry you to-morrow! Why, you are an idiot."

"An idiot, am I? Hem! I thank you, Mlle. Zaire, for your gracious compliment. Parbleau! 'an idiot!' The princess of Castile did not think me 'an idiot,'" and he kissed the jeweled trophy on his arm and walked away, darkly frowning, while Zaire sat down in her dressing-room and laughed heartily.

"These Frenchmen make love so absurdly," she explained to her maid.

There was to be a further exhibition of absurd love-making before that evening's performance was ended.



WILLIAM STEELE, PEDESTRIAN.

FOR BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH SEE PAGE 120.

When Gaston and Zaire appeared for their combined act on the three lofty trapezes he still wore the senorita's trophy. The handline was skillfully thrown over the bar of the lowest trapeze, Zaire immediately pulled herself up, the athlete followed, and the line was thrown off. They sat together on an iron bar seventy-five feet in the air, with no net beneath in case of an accident, rubbing their hands carefully with a handkerchief. They did not address each other, as on previous occasions; but Zaire regarded the jeweled cest with no complacent eye. The Spanish houri attentively watched them through her lorgnette. A deep silence reigned throughout the auditorium. Everybody seemed to be conscious that the exhibition they were about to witness was daring and dangerous to the last degree—an exhibition in which mutual confidence, absolute accuracy and physical strength were the imperative elements.

Soon they began to dart from bar to bar with cat-like activity, and when they were both seen to fall, as if by accident, from the upper bar, pass the second and catch on to the third as if by a miracle, a shudder of horror ran through the crowd. Gaston hung from the lower bar by a single foot, and Zaire swung to and fro in midair by a loop held in his hand. While the audience held its breath, Gaston, looking down at his companion, asked in a low, hoarse voice:

"Will you marry me to-morrow?"

Somewhat startled, but still retaining control of her perfect nerves, she replied:

"Don't be silly; do go on!"

"Answer me. Will you marry me to-morrow? I'll let go and be killed with you unless you promise!"

"Well, yes, then; go on!"

"You mean it—do you swear you mean it?"

"I do."

The words were rapidly spoken, and the act was accomplished with the customary exactitude. As they sat wiping their hands for a still more daring act, the multitude applauding beneath them, Zaire, whose temper was roused, looked into her companion's face, and, between her set teeth, hissed:

"Gaston, you are a dirty dog and a coward!—you are a disgrace to humanity."

The athlete started on his feet as if he had been stung, violently shaking the rope-sustained bar, and as he looked down at her upturned, scornful face, she saw an evil expression hardening and deepening in his eye.

"'A dirty dog and a coward,' eh?"

He slid down to the seat beside her, and said in low, agitated tones:

"Prepare for death; I am going to dash your brains out on that sawdust below!"

He tried to grab her as he spoke, but he lost his balance, and hung by both feet from the lower bar, while simultaneously she shot up and sat on the middle bar, watching him with bewildered eyes.

"The rope! the rope!" she cried to the attendants.

As they prepared to throw the rope, the audience beheld a spectacle that almost froze their blood. Gaston had regained the bar, and now followed Zaire to the top bar, like an infuriated panther. The woman evaded his grasp with extraordinary agility. Some onlookers beholding those shooting, gliding, sinuous forms among the ropes, imagined that it was a new and thrilling act; but it soon became evident to the intelligent portion of the audience that a death-struggle was being enacted at that dizzy height.

Over and over the handline had been accurately thrown to the lower bar, but each time it had been cast off by Gaston, whose eyes glared and foamed like a wild beast that has been goaded to desperation.

Two or three times the madman succeeded in grasping Zaire's arm, but her extraordinary strength, coolness and presence of mind enabled her to escape from the deadly clutch. Finally he seemed to secure a master-grip on the lower bar, but, just at the crisis when she felt that she could not much longer continue the unequal struggle, the handline was again thrown. With one hand she cast a bowline-knot over the bar, and made believe to relax her hold.

"Curse you!" muttered Gaston; "now go down to ——!"

She slid from the bar and down the handrope, which, seeing, the would-be murderer seized and madly shook, swaying her to and fro. Still she bravely kept descending, until sense and sight failed her at the same moment, and she fell fainting, helpless, into the arms of the Spanish senorita who had donated her garter to the glaring murderer above.

Laughing a fiendish laugh, he was seen to detach the hand line from the bar and throw it down. Then he climbed up to the topmost bar and stood up, balancing himself as it swayed to and forth without touching the side-ropes, while the heart of the audience may be said to have stood still. Another blood curling laugh, then a wild shriek that sounded like

"Houp-la!"

And a second afterwards Gaston's body was seen cleaving the air in its awful descent. Shrieks of horror and dismay filled the auditorium when the athlete's body fell with a dull swash on the sawdust—a bleeding, breathless heap of quivering muscles!

The mad trapezist was married to death, and the senorita's garter was sufficiently valuable to pay the expenses of the funeral.

It is reported, sub rosa, that Mlle. Zaire subsequently married a rich Gothamite, and attained to her early ambition of riding in Central Park in her own coach.

The gondola in which Wagner took the air every day has been bought for his widow and sent to Beyreuth. For the table at which the master used to sit in the afternoon, listening to the military band in the Piazza di San Marco, 300 francs has been offered to the owner, who, however, declines to part with it. Another curious relic purchased, it is stated, by some hero-worshipers, is the railway-truck in which the body was taken from Venice to Beyreuth.

This country may not be ready to go to war with a foreign power on a day's notice, but she could soon find a special substitute for cannon-balls, provided there was a shortage in this particular. It is estimated that there are one million baseballs in this country, and if they were fired from a cannon at the enemy the destruction would be terrible. The American Peace Society might object to such an exhibition of cruelty, however, and want scrap-iron used in their stead.

The only politician we ever heard of who could successfully ride two horses at once is the circus-rider who was elected to the Italian Parliament. And our memory is so defective that we are not sure we ever heard of him.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ QUESTIONS THAT DO NOT REACH THIS OFFICE UNTIL TUESDAY MORNING WILL NOT BE ANSWERED UNTIL THE FOLLOWING WEEK.

M. C.—1. The Cincinnati Reds passed through the season of 1869 without being defeated. They met with several defeats in 1868 and 1870. The Atlantics were the first team to defeat them in the last-named season. 2. The Boston Reds were organized in 1871, and included Harry and George Wright, Chas. Gould and Cal McVey of the Cincinnatis. 3. The Red Stockings of Cincinnati never passed through two seasons without losing a game. The Atlantics of Brooklyn alone accomplished that feat. 4. The largest number of innings ever played without a run being scored was twenty-four in the Harvard-Manchester game, May 11, 1877. 5. Twenty-one innings were played in a game June 29, 1878, in Philadelphia, Pa., the Yeager Club then defeating the Girard College by a score of 10 to 7.

CONSTANT READER AND A. S., Cincinnati.—From the statements submitted the nature of the bet rendered it obligatory for the full distance to be walked in order to make one or the other bettor a winner, and, as one of the contestants abandoned the race when he had yet many miles to go and the other was not required to complete the specified distance, the bet is a draw. Had the wager been simply on the result of the race, the man who bet on Fox would have won.

J. D., New Berne.—You will have to specify the points as to which you need enlightenment. We cannot spare the space to describe in its entirety the way in which a billiard or a pool tournament of six contestants is played. Perhaps you wish to know if every player contends with every other, and how many games that will necessitate. The six should so contend, and that will cause fifteen games, exclusive of ties.

C. J. McC., Philadelphia.—The game having been poker, the cutting is to be determined by the value of the cards in that game, nothing else having been agreed upon. Ace, which ordinarily is low in a pack of cards, irrespective of the game played, is both high and low at poker; but it is much oftener high than low at that game, and therefore it is to be rated as high in cutting. A must pay for the wine.

CONSTANT READER.—1. Hatfield was playing with the Mutual Club of this city in 1872, when he made his remarkable throw. 2. The Mutual team that year included Cummings, pitcher; Hicks, catcher; Start, Hatfield and Boyd on the bases; Fulmer or Pearce, short-stop; and McMullin, Eggler and Bechtel in the outfield. 3. Hatfield played with the Cincinnati Club during season of 1868.

TWO READERS, Philadelphia.—B wins. The correct score of the Athletic-Philadelphia game April 28 was 10 to 3 in favor of the Athletics in six innings, according to Section 4 of Rule 40, which says the score shall be the total number of runs made when the side second at bat shall have scored one or more runs than the side first at bat.

J. C. H., Brooklyn.—1. The club which has the most runs after five innings have been completed can claim the victory. 2. The Athletic, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, Hartford, Louisville, Mutual and St. Louis Clubs were members of the League when it was first organized, in 1876. 3. The Boston Club won the League championship in 1877 and 1878.

L. A. T., Baltimore.—1. Force played third base and Radcliff short-stop for the Baltimores in 1873. 2. Force may have played short-stop in a few games in 1873. 3. Radcliff was the regular short-stop of the Baltimores in 1872 and 1873. 4. If the League club should reserve them, they would have to remain with the club.

MCNEIL.—The two gentlemen should have stated the dispute. The late James Fisk Jr. was a citizen of every place in the United States all his life. How long he was a voter here no one can tell, because he might not have voted at all or might not have voted until years after he came here.

J. M., Boston.—If the jump was properly done, it is the best on record; but, before accepting it, it is necessary that we should be put in possession of documents vouching for the fairness of the ground jumped over and the correctness of the measurement. This needed evidence has not been furnished.

GOODYEAR, Ann Arbor.—1. He has not to keep his winnings in front of him at table-stakes. The game was not "freeze-out." 2. There is no limit in that respect. A man can start with fifty dollars and take a thousand or more from his pocket in the course of the game.

ORIOLE, Baltimore.—1. The American Association clubs give visiting clubs a stipulated sum for each game. Other professional associations give a percentage of receipts. 2. The abbreviations are: Times at bat, runs, base-hits, put out, assisted and errors.

PAY KAY.—We have mailed an ALMANAC to your address, in which you will find the records. You will oblige us by sending particulars—dates, etc.—of the performances you claim to have accomplished, some of which are bet er than therein recorded.

J. L. R. AND J. K., Elmira.—He who makes sixty-six in the next game will win the last preceding one. A player who stands at fifty-five to his opponent's fifty-five cannot become sixty-six by taking in the last trick. That will make him sixty-five.

CRIBBAGE.—We did not notice the jack in either the original communication or your first. The matter was probably put in that shape as a catch, as there is no sense otherwise in asking such a question when three cards have overrun.

BASEBALL.—The Atlantics defeated the Cincinnati Reds by a score of 6 to 7 in an eleven-inning game played June 14, 1870, at the Capitoline Grounds, Brooklyn, N. Y.

J. J. B.—There is no such thing as constitutional government in Russia. The Czar is an autocrat, and, whatever certain bodies may be called there, he is Legislature, Congress, Senate and all.

MANY LITTLE CASSINOS.—Unless it has otherwise been agreed upon a player at cassino cannot build or combine for his partner without himself having in hand a card that will take the pile.

FEDERAL HILL, Baltimore.—A correspondent whose note has been mislaid is informed that Federal Hill, Baltimore, was never used as a fort until the breaking-out of our Civil War.

J. W., Pottsville.—In a straight line from this city to London, Eng., the distance is about 4,650 statute miles, and from San Francisco to this city it is about 3,100 such miles.

G. D., Memphis.—1. Cannot give their weight on the day, they not having, we believe, been weighed then. 2. J. L. Sullivan was born Oct. 15, 1858; Charles Mitchell, Nov. 24, 1861.

W. N. A., Baltimore.—John L. Sullivan knocked Jimmy Elliott out at the picnic and outdoor exhibition given by the former at Washington Park, N. Y. City, July 4, 1882.

J. J. F., Brainerd.—C has no right to have the cards shuffled between the deal and the draw. No answers by mail. Paper will be sent for three months for money received.

"DRAW" POKER, Chicago.—It is a matter of agreement. It is now over a quarter of a century since blazes formed one of the regular poker hands.

JIM, Montgomery.—W. D. Sloane (of the carpet firm) married Wm. H. Vanderbilt's daughter.

TOM MCDONALD, formerly of Machias, Me., please send address to your brother Henry, in care of this office.

E. W. H., Detroit.—1. It is a separate and new organization. 2. The Metropolitan Club now belongs to the American Association.

C. R., Philadelphia.—The Cincinnatis beat the Athletics by that score May 30, 1882.

H. C. M., Philadelphia.—We never heard of George Wright batting left handed.

H. B., Philadelphia.—1. The Athletics defeated the Detroits, 4 to 2, Sept 12, 1881. 2. Dave Force hails from New York City.

BLUE STOCKING.—We fail to see any advantage to be derived from the new rule.

J. W. C., Des Moines.—B is correct. The ball changes its direction on a curve, and not at an angle.

BOSTONIAN.—We do not know his salary. He is said to get over $3,000 for the season.

SUBSCRIBER, Philadelphia.—The game was an exhibition one, and the bet is a draw.

N. F. S., Trenton.—The Chicagos won the League championship three successive seasons. No answers by telegraph or mail.

E. C., Detroit.—Unless otherwise specified, the count is one for opponent in case a player fails to hit a ball at four-ball billiards.

E. W. P., Shenandoah.—Seward is the only one who has the record. Time made in flying start races does not form a record.

E. G. R., Sandusky.—Schaefer's best run of record at cushion caroms is 35.

W. F. C., Saratoga Springs.—The bulkhead of a locomotive includes the whole of front part; also smoke-stack and head-light.

HOW GAMBLERS DO NOT WIN.

"How Gamblers Win" has been a favorite theme with both writers of books and writers for the newspaper press for many a year. It is a rather barren one just now. A much more fruitful subject would be to describe how gamblers do not win. In this city their lot has for many months been a hard one, and no one of them can foresee the time when it will be bettered. Stimulated by personal jealousies and rivalries, the police authorities have pursued them, and so, but without any such stimulus, has the Society for the Prevention of Crime. Their trade is undoubtedly unlawful; but even when they have not been pursuing it their places have been invaded and their property seized. In vain have they represented that these crusades injure the general business of the city, through keeping away from it merchants and other buyers who, finding that they cannot here worship the goddess Fortune in their leisure hours, are peculiarly apt to make their Spring purchases in cities wherein gambling is a comparatively easy matter. The raids upon the gambling-houses of Gotham still go on, although it is with tears in their eyes that the police are compelled to make them, as the bluecoats enjoy many more perquisites when the Knights of the Green Cloth are busy than when they are idle. The war threatens not alone to be kept up, but also to be waged to the extent of extermination. There is not even a sign of a compromise by which a favored few can find exemption at the expense of the many. For this state of affairs the fraternity are themselves in a large measure to blame. Some of their number have been too conspicuous of late years. Their calling, being unlawful, should be pursued with as little noise and assurance as possible. Instead of that, not a few of the somewhat overcrowded profession of cards have let slip no opportunity to come to the front, sometimes as bookmakers and at other times as patrons of sports. In this they have done themselves but little good, and have done none at all either to those proper sports and pastimes that are conducted publicly or to those of another kind, which are not usually carried on in the light of day. It may not be difficult for one to justify his being a gambler, at least in his own mind; but there is no wisdom in permitting this self-justification to grow and glow until it amounts to a pride of which public proclamation is made. Probably gambling will always exist, but it is nevertheless not a useful calling, and they who follow it should aim to keep in the background as much as possible. Instead of openly creating the opportunities for this sort of speculation, they should be content to let others create them, in order that they themselves may profit slowly but surely. Some of the fraternity have been going it too fast and furiously of late. They have found delight in posing as "biger men nor old Grant," or anybody else, and this of itself has sufficed to invite the attention of such bodies as the S. P. C. to the magnitude of their operations. They bade fair to win the whole earth, and it has now made one revolution too many for them. Perhaps the check they have received will prove salutary.

SHORT NINES.

The baseball fever is raging uncommonly high this season. The thirst for players is so great that in Philadelphia they are ransacking hospitals in order to make up nines. One set of cripples is called the Snorkey Baseball Club, in honor of the famous hero of the drama "Under the Gaslight." Like him, the players comprising this club have but one arm apiece. The nine chosen to antagonize the Snorkeys are called the "Hoppers," from the fact that they are one-legged men, or at least supposed to be. According to accounts, the "Hoppers" have a veritable curiosity in George Dowd, who is to play first base, and of whom it is said that "his left leg is gone above the knee." It will be worth more than the price of admission to see George hobble around on his two feet and two knees, when the motive power above the knee of one of them is altogether gone. He is the only one of the nine thus afflicted. All the others are either minus a foot and ankle or have lost a leg below the knee.

THE PAST FEW DAYS have witnessed the quite sudden taking-off of two men who had been conspicuous in yachting circles, the one in this country and the other abroad. The owner of the Gracie and the Dauntless at different times, John R. Waller had been connected with the New York Yacht Club for about ten years, and in 1881 he became its Commodore, in which capacity he defended the America's Cup against the Canadian yacht Atalanta. The other yachtsman who died was Prince Gustav de Batthyani, whose pennant floated in the breeze off Cowes when the yacht America won the cup that Commodore Waller so recently defended. Those were the days in which the saucy Yankee schooner showed the British cutters heels so clean that the first news those ashore got was couched in the memorable words: "The America first—the rest nowhere!" The dark-visaged Hungarian Count was even then fascinated with the turf, on which he afterwards became eminent. At his death he was one of the oldest members of the English Jockey Club, which in a very brief period has lost three valuable men—Lord Stamford, W. S. Crawfurd and Batthyani.

CRICKET.

The following officers were chosen: President, Marquis of Lorne; vice-presidents, Judge Dartnell and J. Howard; honorary secretary, G. S. Lindsay; committee—Messrs. Trotter, Gamble, Logan, Boultbee and W. N. Merritt.

CHICAGO vs. DETROIT.

Five thousand people witnessed the Detroits defeat the Chicagos May 5 in Chicago, Ill., the League championship season in that city being then opened. The visitors started off with the lead, scoring two runs on errors by Corcoran, Williamson and Pfeffer. Good batting by Burns and Flint in the second and fourth innings earned both of the runs credited to the Chicagos. The score remained a tie from the fourth until the last half of the ninth inning, when Weidman reached first base in safety on a bad miss by Dalrymple after two men were out, was sent to second on a safe hit by Wood, and came home with the winning run on a two-base hit by Hanlon over the right field fence. The pitching of Weidman was wonderfully effective, he striking out eight men, including three in succession in the seventh inning. Score:

The Detroits again defeated the champion Chicagos on their own grounds May 7, when about two thousand people were present. The home-team suffered a humiliating and decisive defeat, being blanked and making only one safe hit off Weidman's pitching. The visitors bunched their hits in two innings, when, materially assisted by fielding errors, seven runs were scored. The Chicagos were again obliged to play without Gore's valuable services, he being unable to play on account of illness.

ATHLETIC vs. BALTIMORE.

The above-named clubs met for the first time this season May 7 in Baltimore, Md., rain having caused a postponement of the game scheduled for May 5. About six thousand people witnessed the Athletics secure a decisive victory. Errors by Rowen and Stovey at the outset of the contest gave the Baltimores their only run. Corey in the second inning sprained his ankle while running to second base, and gave way to Blakiston. The Baltimores outbatted the Athletics, but were unfortunate in scattering their hits and making costly errors at critical points. Moynahan's magnificent one-hand catch of a hot liner in the eighth inning was the fielding feature. The score was:

THE AMERICAN COLLEGE ASSOCIATION.

The clubs of the above-named association commenced May 5 their contests for the championship pennant. Two games were scheduled on that date, but the one announced between the Brown University and Harvard College nines in Providence, R. I., was postponed on account of rain. The Yale and Amherst nines had a close contest at Hamilton Park, New Haven, Ct. Terry, in the fourth inning, made a home-run, bringing in Hopkins, who had hit safely. Jones' pitching puzzled the Amhersts, who made but three safe hits. The delivery of Harris was also very effective, he retiring eight of the Yales on strikes. The Yales won by the appended score:

A CLEVELAND CLOTHING FIRM is getting up handsome gold medals, of equal value, to be awarded to the four members of the Cleveland Club making the best records in League championship games, viz., for the best fielding, the greatest number of base-hits, the greatest number of sacrifice-hits, and the greatest number of runs. The number of sacrifice-hits is to be determined from games on the home grounds, as there only can an accurate record of that point be kept.

THE CLIPPER CLUB of Williamsburg, L. I., have reorganized for the coming season and would like to hear from all amateur clubs. The names and positions of the players are: Brower, pitcher; Searle, catcher; F. J. Cryster, Bock and Miller on the bases; Baker, short-stop; and E. M. Cryster, M. McDevitt and W. McDevitt in the outfield.

WRIGHT & DITSON have issued a very neat and indispensable little work, containing information as to all League games to be played, with blank spaces for recording the runs, base-hits and runs earned credited to each club in every game.

WESTON D. FISLER, a genial veteran, formerly of the Athletics, has been appointed manager of the Merrit Club of Camden, N. J. He has the requisite ability and experience to successfully direct the champion Jersey team.

CLUBS DESIRING the services of a manager, pitcher and catcher, who can all furnish good testimonials in regard to their ability, are referred to an advertisement in another column.

BOSTON vs. PHILADELPHIA.

The first championship game between the above-named clubs was played May 4 at Recreation Park, Philadelphia, Pa., and was marked by very heavy batting. The home-nine did the best batting, but lost the game by bad fielding, aided by a questionable decision at the home-plate in the second inning, which gave the Bostons a run. Purcell reappeared with the Philadelphias, taking Harbidge's place at third base, while Gross filled the vacancy at left-field. Manning and Coleman led in batting, and Morrill in fielding. Score.

PROVIDENCE vs. NEW YORK.

Harry Wright's reconstructed Providence team put in a first appearance on the Polo Grounds this season on May 4, and they were greeted by a very respectable assemblage of over four thousand people, the Grays always having been favorites in the metropolis. The great majority of the spectators were in full expectation of seeing the home-team add a victory to their list, as, after the close games of Tuesday and Wednesday last which the visitors had had with the Phillies—4 to 3 and 4 to 1—it was not anticipated that they would be able to take the conquerors of the Bostons into camp; but in this estimate the crowd counted without their host, for Harry's team "polished off the handle" of the New York front-door in the best style of the art, decidedly outplaying their strong adversaries alike in the field and at the bat. In hitting they went in for the liveliest kind of work with the ash from the start the close of the third inning leaving the score at 4 to 0 in their favor, three of the four runs being earned off Ward's pitching. On the other side, the Yorks found Radbourn's strategic pitching a very different style of delivery to face from the merely swift curve-pitching of Whitney, and it was not until the sixth inning that they could score more than a single hit from it. Then, however, a three-base hit by Hankinson and a single by Ward gave an earned run, Denny's wild throw to Start giving a second run. Good hits by Gillespie and Caskins in the ninth inning also yielded an earned run. Of the eleven runs scored by the Providence team only three were earned, dropped fly-balls by Troy and Clapp giving the visitors chances to add three of the runs to their score, and other errors five more runs. It was evidently an off-day for the home-team. Farrell bore off the palm at the bat and in the field for the visitors, and Caskins for New York. Joe Start was the recipient of quite a reception in the first inning. Cassidy distinguished himself by a good three-base hit, which made his wife happy, she sitting in the ladies' gallery, which was well filled with the fair sex. A. F. Odlin acted as umpire, and he discharged the onerous duties of the position with impartiality and good judgment.

Singularly enough, the Providence team of batsmen, who were successful against Ward's pitching on Friday, failed when facing the swift delivery of O'Neil on Saturday, May 5, when they played their second game with New York. The Providence team was the same as that of the day before, and again was the pitching effective and the field-support up to a very high mark. The contest was deeply interesting up to the close of the sixth inning, at which time the score stood at 1 to 0 only in favor of New York, the single run being earned in the first inning by the good hits of Ewing and Connor and sharp baserunning. In the seventh inning the visitors would again have been retired for a blank but for a bad overthrow of Ewing's to Connor, and in the eighth a fumble by Ewing and a bad throw to first by Hankinson gave the Providence team the victory, neither side scoring afterwards. The good effect of New York's victories over Boston were largely offset by the three defeats the team sustained at the hands of the Providence team, the last occurring on May 7, when the home-nine were badly whipped, and that, too, through the lack of judgment displayed in the selection of the pitcher and catcher for the day. It is not worth while, however, commenting on the subject, for before the game was half over the mistake was painfully realized, the score at the end of the fifth inning standing at 13 to 1 in favor of the visitors, O'Neil being fearfully punished, as the score of earned runs off his pitching—seven in all—shows. Ward went in to pitch in the sixth inning, and base-hitting nearly ceased in consequence, as only two more were scored in four innings' play. In this inning Ewing had to retire from an injured leg, and Dorgan also, the latter being sick, as the whole team were, in fact, about this time. Troy and Welch took their places. Score:

BUFFALO vs. CLEVELAND.

The championship season in Buffalo, N. Y., was opened May 5, the Buffalo and Cleveland Clubs then contending for the fourth time. Twelve hundred people were present, although the weather was cloudy and cold. Both nines fielded finely throughout. The Buffalos won by bunching six safe hits in the first and fifth innings, when they scored six runs. York knocked the ball over the left-field fence for a home-run in the second inning. The Clevelands earned three more runs on singles by Bushong and Hotaling and double-baggers by Dunlap and Phillips in the third inning. The visitors failed to secure either a safe hit or run off Galvin after the fourth inning. Foley, Richardson and York led in batting, and Richardson, Dunlap and Muldoon in fielding. Score:

The contest between these clubs May 7 was very exciting. The Clevelands by superior base-running and timely hitting just managed to win and thus turn the tables on their opponents, after one of the hardest fought games ever played on the Buffalo grounds. The Clevelands presented the same nine as in the preceding game, while on behalf of the Buffalos Derby took Galvin's place as pitcher, and O'Rourke and Rowe exchanged positions. The score:

So LONG as the press of the baseball cities encourage the abuse of umpires by the crowd of spectators, as they do by their partizan comments on the umpire's decisions and their abuse of the new umpires, there can hardly be any improvement over the old order of things, which the League and American Associations have striven to do away with. Criticism on errors in interpreting rules is one thing, but abusive comments on errors of judgment by the umpire is another matter. Unluckily it happens that too many reporters are mere home-club partizans, and hence the injustice too frequently indulged in.

THOMAS BURNS is open for an engagement with a baseball club. See card.

ECLIPSE vs. COLUMBUS.

The initial championship contest between the above-named clubs took place May 1 in Columbus, O., in the presence of fifteen hundred people. The contest was close and exciting. The home-team made more base-hits and fewer errors than their opponents, but lost through costly errors at critical points and poor base-running, especially in the ninth inning.

COLUMBUS vs. ST. LOUIS.

The first championship game between the above-named clubs was played May 5 in Columbus, O., and was closely contested at every point. Mullane pitched for the first time, and held the Columbus nine down to five safe hits, but these were luckily made at critical points. The home-team made the winning runs in the eighth inning on safe hits by Mann and Smith and errors by Latham and Comiskey. The visitors' hits were scattered.

The above result was reversed May 6, when the St. Louis Club won its first championship contest of the season. The visitors took the lead from the start, fielding faultlessly and bunching their hits in two innings, while the home-team fielded loosely and were only able to get six scattering hits in the entire game. A single by Valentine and a three-bagger by Kemmler saved the local team from being blanked.

METROPOLITAN vs. ALLEGHENY.

The above-named clubs were scheduled to play a championship game May 5, but the continued illness of Umpire Daniels compelled a postponement, and an exhibition contest took place instead. The Alleghenys batted Lynch's pitching all over the field, and won by a score of 13 to 3. Dickerson made five successive safe hits, including a three-baser and a two-bagger, and Swartwood got in four hits, including a home-run. Magner, the St. Louis substitute-umpire, having arrived May 7, the championship contest then took place before the largest attendance of the season on the local grounds. Errors by Swartwood, Mansell and Creamer in the first inning gave the Mets three runs and virtually the victory. In the second inning, singles by Crane and Esterbrook and a two-bagger by Nelson earned two runs, and an error by Battin yielded another run. The Alleghenys made a creditable up-hill fight, but failed to overcome their opponents' long lead. Swartwood made a home-run in the fifth inning. The score:

THE PORT HURON NINE defeated the Peoria Reds April 26 in Peoria, Ill, by a score of 5 to 3. Bechtel pitched very effectively, while Sweeney was hit all over the field by the Port Hurons.

TWO REMARKABLE CONTESTS.

The initial championship game between the Eclipse Club of Louisville, Ky., and the Cincinnatis took place May 5 in Cincinnati, O., and was so remarkably closely contested that eleven innings were necessary before the question of superiority could be settled. Each club made a run in the first inning, and the score remained tied until the eleventh, when the home-team managed to get in the two winning runs. The score was:

Another stubbornly-fought and prolonged struggle marked the meeting between these two clubs May 7 on the same grounds, the Cincinnatis then experiencing their first defeat. The visitors were given two unearned runs at the outset, and the home-team tied the score in the sixth inning. From that point out the contest was wonderfully exciting. A new ball was introduced in the twelfth inning, when the visitors by two three-baggers and a single pounded out three runs, two earned, which gave them the victory. Macullar took Carpenter's place on the home-team, the latter being ill.

THE INTERSTATE ASSOCIATION

commenced its championship season May 1 in Wilmington, Del., the Quicksteps of that city then defeating the Brooklyn Club by a score of 9 to 6. It was one-sided up to the eighth inning, when the visitors tied the score. Dorr pitched effectively for the Quicksteps. Rain prevented the game between the Harrisburg and Anthracite scheduled for the same day in Harrisburg, Pa. On the following afternoon the season in Reading was opened by a game between the Actives of that city and the Anthracites of Pottsville. The home-team took in the "coal-crackers" to the tune of 14 to 6, making no fewer than nine runs in the fifth inning by a streak of hard hitting. Grady, the catcher of the Anthracites, was hurt by a foul-tip in the second inning, and Milligan took his place. Ardner, catcher of the Actives, in stealing to second base during the fourth inning, ruptured one of the ligaments of his leg, and, notwithstanding the great pain, he pluckily played throughout the game. He has, however, been confined to his bed since, with small hopes of being able to be about for some time to come. Two games were played May 3, the Anthracites defeating the Quicksteps, 9 to 8, in Wilmington, although the home-team at the end of the sixth inning led by a score of 7 to 1, and the Harrisburg team defeating the Actives of Reading, 14 to 3, in the presence of the largest crowd that ever assembled on a ball ground in Harrisburg. Wise retired nine of the Actives on strikes. The Anthracites on May 7 visited Camden, N. J., and there met with a bad beating at the hands of the Merritt Club, the figures at the finish being 21 to 7. Fennelly of the home-team led in batting with four safe hits, including two triple-baggers. Berklebach, besides making a home-run in his four hits, did the best fielding. A ten inning game was played on the same day in Wilmington between the Quicksteps and Actives. The visit

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY JOHN R. PEASE.

"Born in yon blaze of Orient sky,
Sweet month, thy radiant form unfold,
Unclose thy blue, voluptuous eye
And wave thy shadowy locks of gold."
For thee the sparkling fountains glow,
For thee the bursting buds expand,
Bright brooks and mighty rivers flow,
And tiptoe Graces hand-in-hand,
And deep blue skies that bend above
The green earth like a dream of love;
For thee the lovely flowers unfold—
The swallow comes to greet the Spring!
The robin with his breast of gold,
The bluebird with his azure wing;
The dove now wears his burnished breast,
And procreant sparrows build their nest;
The crocus, firstling of the year,
And fragrant hyacinths appear.
All these and more of beauty's power
But make more sad the parting hour,
Like faded scenes once held divine
On Horeb's mount! by Delphi's shrine!

CHAPTER XIV.—THE ABDUCTION.

The lodgings of Corcelli's soldiers had been prepared in an inn of Loreto usually frequented by sailors. An immense room on the ground-floor, against the propping posts of which the waves beat when the wind blew from the open sea, had been placed at the disposal of the bandits.

As soon as they had set their paraphernalia of war against the wall—muskets, corselets, and old helmets, under which the French leaguers and orderly cavalry of the Duke of Alba had fought, sad relics of the civil and religious wars of the sixteenth century—Corcelli summoned the landlord.

"What is your name?" he asked him.

"Il Cappucino, my lord," replied the innkeeper, looking about him anxiously.

"Then listen to me. Prepare us a tub of olla-podrida, mountains of smoked ham, and roll in here a tun of Vesuvius wine. Do you understand me?"

"Yes, my lord, very well," stammered Il Cappucino; "your lordship wished a tub of olla-podrida, mountains of smoked ham, and a hogshead of Lachryma-christi."

"That is it."

"But all these things are very dear."

"What matters it to you! Masaniello, the chief of the people, will pay you."

"Aye!" murmured the innkeeper, shaking his head.

Corcelli took from his pocket a flint and a piece of amadow, struck the steel with the handle of his knife, and lighted the match of his musket; then he took aim at the Signor Cappucino, adding:

"I say and repeat that Masaniello will pay."

The innkeeper took his cap in his hand and recoiled to the door of the room step by step, making innumerable obeisances.

Funny lights were lit, which served to light up the hole; the brigands took some spotted cards and dice from their knapsacks, stuck their poniards in the spruce tables, and began to play a diabolical game.

"Rascals," said the chief to his band, "we start to-night for the Apennines. Each one of you may drink as much as he likes; but I shall leave in pledge here all that get drunk, and they will be hung to-morrow."

This advice given, Corcelli took a seat, filled his pipe—for he smoked notwithstanding the laws of the Holy Catholic, Apostolic and Roman Church—and began to puff into the air capricious clouds of smoke.

The olla-podrida, ham and Vesuvius wine soon arrived. Then arose a strange tumult, bursts of laughter, oaths, clashing mugs and glasses, and the horde of villains pounced like ferocious beasts upon the food exposed to their voracity.

This scene was lit up by lamps hung from the beams of the ceiling, and which shed at intervals now shadows, now a red and flaming light, upon the coarse faces of the bandits.

Scarcely had Corcelli finished his supper when he beckoned to his two lieutenants, and led them to the adjoining room.

"My men," he said to them, "we came down to Naples this morning, and lent a hand to these ragged lazaroni that have driven the Duke of Arcos from his palace. Truth to tell, I was not very curious to know whether the fishermen of Ischia or Prodrida would stand the tax on fish or not, and whether their wives or daughters could sell oranges and watermelons without paying our gracious master the duties; but I hoped to have Toledo street or that of the Vicaria for a battle-field, and to pillage a little according to the rules of war. I do not speak of a certain galleon which I had counted on. That's an affair fallen to the ground. You know very well that the leader of the revolt is a narrow-minded, vulgar peasant, who knows nothing of the respect due to gentlemen of the highway like ourselves. The pillage I expected did not take place."

"We have been duped," broke in a little old man with a paternal air and angular and withered face.

This personage had been surnamed Il Buon Padre, by reason of the simplicity of his gestures and the singular unction of his tongue. Needless to say that Il Buon Padre was one of the most resolute, avaricious and inexorable rascals in Corcelli's band.

"So much the more duped," continued the chief, "as the Duke of Arcos, though he had a certain mania for killing, which comes, I believe, from family traditions, was a generous and liberal Viceroy, who intrusted us from time to time with a lucrative expedition. Then, the lords and ladies of the court honored us with a particular confidence. If perchance they deemed a dagger-thrust useful, either to calm a jealous husband or to dismiss an unfaithful lover, it was us they commissioned to give it. You see that this cursed revolution, in which we have co-operated like fools, strips us of our best income."

"Then why did you lead us against the Spaniards?" replied Il Buon Padre. "Didn't you know that every business suffers in revolutionary times? Confidence vanishes, money is scarce, and nothing more is to be found on the road, per Bacco!"

"Il Buon Padre is right," added Marsupio, Corcelli's second lieutenant. "A great lord like the Duke of Arcos, whose ancestors inhabited for four or five centuries a strong castle on a mountain-top, and who had no other occupation than that of butchering the monks and stripping the passers-by, can still understand the calling we follow. He has respect for highwaymen; he makes sbirros out of them when they are old, and the open air of the Apennines no longer suits their health. But fishermen and contadini! Pugh! such people have neither respect nor pity for us."

After having allowed his officers to give free vent to their ill-humor, Corcelli continued:

"Masaniello has promised me to give us twenty thousand ducats; but the knave would be better able to dispatch to Loreto five or six hundred fishermen armed with boathooks, who would run us through like conger-eels. What do you say about it, Marsupio?"

"I say that Viceroys in wooden shoes are all the more dangerous men, as their habits are less known," replied the lieutenant.

And he poured himself out a glass of wine, which he swallowed at a draught.

"So I have made up my mind to depart this very night; but beforehand ——"

Corcelli's voice became almost unintelligible.

"I know a treasure, two treasures, that I wish to carry off at one blow," he murmured.

"Ah! ah!" said the lieutenants.

And they drew near to the chief, stretching their necks and devouring him with their eyes.

"These treasures are confined in an impenetrable building, and watched over by a strong detachment.

"Corpo santo!" exclaimed Il Buon Padre and Marsupio simultaneously.

"And what is this building?" queried the second.

"A convent."

"And of how many soldiers is the garrison composed?" asked Marsupio.

"Three hundred nuns."

The two brigands burst out laughing.

"Ah! Corcelli, what a jolly companion you make!" they cried, rubbing their hands together. "A convent to take by storm, three hundred nuns to reduce to slavery! We will long remember this night!"

"Is the treasure large?" questioned Il Buon Padre.

"Yes and no. Let us get possession of it first, and we will count the ducats afterwards."

"That's right."

"But I wish to tell you all," added Corcelli. "You recollect that we took the Viceroy's daughter to the abbey of Saint Claire this morning?"

"Yes."

"I know that Corinne, Masaniello's sister, is also in the same retreat. I wish to abduct these two women, and, no matter which side triumphs, I am sure of getting a good ransom."

"At what hour will the battle begin?"

"At midnight."

"Well and good," replied Il Buon Padre, "We will take care that our men rub up their arms. If the nuns were to resist? Pest! one must foresee everything."

During this dialogue the tub of olla-podrida was emptied in the other room, the mountain of smoked ham had disappeared, and the hogshead of wine was drained.

One of the brigands entered the room where the conventicle of the chiefs was being held, and came and placed himself opposite to their table, curling his moustache.

"What do you wish, Conrad?" asked Corcelli.

"General," replied the lansquenet, with his frightful German accent, "there's no more olla-podrida, no more ham, no more wine."

"Light the match of my musket, and fetch the innkeeper here," returned Corcelli coolly.

A moment later the unfortunate landlord appeared. The first thing he saw on entering the room was a carbine pointed at him.

"Another hogshead of Lachryma-christi!" said the robber chief, raising his voice.

"Masaniello will pay that, too?" asked the innkeeper.

"Yes."

Il Cappucino bowed, and went out backwards, like the first time—that is to say, without losing sight of the weapon that threatened him.

The gambling among the brigands had reached its height. The spotted cards stained with wine, the dice and the silver pieces rolled upon the tables, accompanied by cries and oaths. Frequent disputes arose among the players, and then they withdrew their rag-covered legs from beneath the tables, seized their poniards, and sprang to their feet in the middle of the room to settle the difference. The chiefs succeeded only with great difficulty in separating them by threatening them with Corcelli's anger.

Little by little the air became became heavy; a thick cloud of suffocating smoke hung over the bandits' heads, and a few of them, overcome with sleep and intoxication, sank down upon the floor. Without the sky was clear, the weather magnificent, and a few pale moonbeams, percolating through the windows of the hole, seemed to wander with regret in the midst of this human rubbish.

Corcelli and his lieutenants returned suddenly, and gave the signal for departure.

Then ensued a moment of inexpressible confusion. The most inebriated of the robbers rose up cursing, and endeavored to regain their equilibrium. Others looked for their money, knapsacks and arms as they gathered up an enormous quantity of rags and old iron. When the ranks were formed as well as possible, it was found that Conrad had remained lying on the battle-field, with his legs apart and arms crosswise.

"Up with you, dog," said Corcelli, giving him a kick.

"I'll take care of the artillery-train," grumbled the drunkard. "Roll in the wine."

"Good-night to you, then; and, above all, see that your awaking is a happy one!" added the chief.

He charged his men to be silent, and the band set off through the faubourg of Loreto.

On arriving at the convent of Our Lady del Carmine, the brigands turned to the right, marched along the moat of the city, and after a quarter of an hour's march reached the Capua gate.

Corcelli had the drawbridge lowered and the herse raised, in the name of Masaniello. Then he passed through the winding streets to be found to the west of the city, between the archbishop's palace and Saint Domingo. His men had covered up their arms, the glitter of which might have betrayed them, and proceeded along as noiselessly as possible. At length they reached without adventure a narrow way, at the end of which could be seen the church of the abbey of Saint Claire.

The rose-window over the entrance was lighted up. Women's voices, muffled by the distance, whispered through the night. The nuns were chanting the evening service.

Corcelli concealed his men in the angles of the neighboring houses, and began to examine the place by himself, like a wolf prowling around a sheepfold.

He discovered finally a low chapel covered with a conical roof of cut stone, which was easy to scale. Above the chapel was a window. The chief called his lieutenants, and explained to them his plan for making the escalade. He was the first to make the attempt, in order to encourage his men.

The church-choir was filled with incense and lights. A hundred wax tapers lit up the altar, bringing into brilliant relief a handsome painting by Corregio.

To the right—that is to say, on the right-hand side of the altar, and opposite to the window that Corcelli had designated as his point of attack—the abbess, with bare head and hands clasped over her bosom, was following the service in a mass-book decorated with arms, which a kneeling postulant held open before her. A magnificent emerald glistened on the ring-finger of her right hand. Four nuns surrounded her, and presented to her at the least gesture her cross, mitre, the taper-stand or the silver-gilt censor.

In stalls arranged in double rows stood the sisters in their picturesque and humble costume, sweetly chanting the psalms under the directions of an elder nun seated at the music-stand. There were at times moments of solemn silence. The light of the wax tapers seemed to lose itself in the depths of the vault, on the top of which gold emblazonry scintillated upon a sky-blue ground. The holy vigil of the sisters was drawing to a close, when the glass of the window we mentioned gave way suddenly, and broke upon the slabs of the choir with a terrible crash.

Notwithstanding the rule that ordered them to keep their eyes constantly on the ground, the nuns could not help casting frightened glances towards the spot whence the noise proceeded.

A man appeared on the window-sill, and sprang nimbly into the centre of the choir. Two, three, six, twenty men followed him, and drew up in battle-array on the right and left of the altar. The nuns did not fly; duty and doubtless fear riveted their feet to the floor of the stalls. It seemed to them as if they were under the sway of a frightful dream.

Corcelli advanced to the foot of the abbess' throne, and made a hypocritical obeisance.

Meanwhile Il Buon Padre and Marsupio placed sentinels at all the issues to prevent anyone from escaping.

"Venerable mother," said Corcelli to the Lady Superior, "permit a penitent sinner to kiss your hand."

He approached her, put his lips to the emerald that glistened on her finger, quickly drew off the ring, and let it drop into the immense gaping pocket in his close coat.

"Wretch!" exclaimed the old lady, "do you not know that this ring is a relic which you are forbidden to touch?"

"Fear nothing, venerable mother. I was a clerk in my young days. Like Samuel, I presented the wine and water to the pontiffs of the Lord. My hands have received the chrismal unction—they are sanctified."

The soft words of the chief and his contrite air restored a little courage to the Superior, who rose, extended her hand with an inspired gesture, and said:

"Leave here, wretch! violate the sanctuary no longer. Fear the excommunication that has already smitten you!"

"I know, O holy woman! the decree of the Council of Thirty, that declares those who dare to pass the thresholds of your abbeys without the bishop's permission to be cut off, ipso facto, from the communion of the faithful. But I have received from the Supreme Pontiff a general and plenary indulgence, which frees me forever from the power of the Devil. Do you know where I carry the Pope's bull, venerable mother?" added Corcelli impudently.

The Superior maintained silence.

"In the barrel of my musket."

And Corcelli struck the marble slabs of the choir violently with the butt-end of his gun.

"To me, my sisters, to me!" cried the abbess.

"Prepare your arms!" resumed Corcelli in a voice of thunder "If one of these women utters a cry or attempts to quit the place, kill her on the spot!"

The nuns then covered their eyes with their veils, and a frightful scene of sacrilege and spoliation took place beneath the holy vault.

The tabernacle was opened, and Corcelli's men plundered it of the consecrated vases. They broke down the door of the vestry, and picked the locks of its closets. All the riches that the piety of the faithful had hoarded up in the convent of Saint Claire, gold crosses embellished with diamonds, sparkling banners, ornaments, the work on which was more precious than the material, fell into profane hands, and were torn up, broken in an instant, and thrown pell-mell into vile wallets.

The bandits had not yet accomplished their work of destruction, when Corcelli, taking ten of his most dangerous rascals, approached the abbess.

"Two women took refuge in your convent to-day?" he said interrogatively.

"Two women," stammered the aged Superior, whom fear had deprived of reason; "yes—indeed—but to whom do you refer?"

"To Isabella, the daughter of the Duke of Arcos, and Corinne, the sister of Masaniello. Deliver them up to us."

"Oh! never, never!" cried the unfortunate abbess, wringing her hands.

"Make haste to obey, old woman!" replied Corcelli, with trembling lips and clenched hands.

"But it would be an unheard-of thing in Naples for two young girls to be delivered up by the Superior of the convent which had given them shelter ——"

The unfortunate woman could say no more. Corcelli had struck her on the arm with the point of his poniard, and the blood flowed down her robe. She swooned.

"Time is fleeting. What is to be done? what is to be done?" howled the chief, transported with rage, and beating the floor with the butt-end of his musket.

He drew up his men in order of battle on the stairs of the choir, and in a voice that made the sisters shudder cried:

"Nuns of hell, will you deliver up to me Isabella, the daughter of the Duke of Arcos, and Corinne, the sister of Masaniello?"

No voice replied. Corcelli repeated the question. Then an old sister came forward, dragging her feet over the marble slabs, called God to witness the violence she and her companions had been the victims of, and conducted the terrible robber to the cell in which the young girls were confined.

In a poor room, bare and solitary, lit up by the uncertain light of a night-lamp, Corinne and Isabella lay asleep in the same bed. The former, more robust than her companion, had passed her arm under Isabella's head, and the daughter of the people seemed to protect the daughter of the Viceroy in her sleep.

The nun who had led Corcelli and some of his men thither awoke Masaniello's sister and fiancee.

"Get up and dress yourselves, dear children," she said to them.

"And why, pray," good mother?" queried the Spanish maiden.

"You will know it soon enough. Dress yourselves, and offer up in your hearts a fervent prayer to God. The convent is invaded."

"And my brother, where is he?" cried Corinne.

"Masaniello is doubtless ignorant of your misfortune. The Holy Madonna alone can save you."

The two young girls dressed in haste. Corcelli had Isabella called.

"Senora," said he, "get ready to follow me. Your father, the Duke of Arcos, awaits you at New Castle, and I am charged to take you to him."

"Did he give you a letter for me?"

"A letter? Ah! noble lady, do you think me foolish enough to carry such a paper? If these beggarly rascals of Naples had arrested and searched me, I should have been lost."

Isabella hesitated.

"You must persuade your companion to follow you," continued the brigand. "The Duke of Arcos orders it thus."

"My father does not know Corinne."

"I spoke to him about Masaniello's sister."

"And to what purpose can he wish her to accompany me to New Castle?"

"Masaniello holds you as a hostage."

"Well?"

"Corpo santo! the Duke of Arcos would not be displeased to hold in his turn Masaniello's sister in his power."

"You lie, wretch!" cried Isabella, with indignation. "My father is a Castilian, my father is a nobleman; he is incapable of having given you the disgraceful mission of which you speak."

"Ah! not so many arguments, please!" sneered Corcelli. And turning to his rogues, he pursued: "To work, the rest of you!"

Five or six brigands rushed into the room, seized the young girls, and bound and gagged them in spite of their cries.

Corcelli then returned to the church, had the doors barricaded on the outside, and safely effected his retreat with his double prey without anyone in the neighborhood having heard the noise of his expedition.

CHAPTER XV.—DOM FRANCESCO.

Pietro had faithfully executed Masaniello's orders, but, owing to a fatal chain of circumstances, he had not been able to save either his fiancee or Isabella. He had gone to the faubourg of Loreto, and had seen Corcelli and his band make themselves at home there. Squatted in a boat moored to the shore, he had witnessed their orgy. The smuggler had followed them in their flight, had arrived with them on the square occupied by the convent of Saint Claire, and had concealed himself in a dark alley in order to watch better. Unfortunately, Corcelli, in disposing his men on the little square and in the neighboring streets, had had the door occupied behind which Pietro was hiding.

The abduction effected the brigands left. Pietro quitted his hiding-place and followed the ravishers step by step, still ignorant of the crime of which they had been guilty. He was not aware of his misfortune and that of the young chief till the moment he beheld Corcelli's two prisoners enter a calessino.

The vehicle departed at full trot on the road to Calabria, and the brigands escorted it on a run.

Pietro paused on the highway, asking himself whether he should pursue the bandits or betake himself to the Vicaria to inform Masaniello. But the smuggler reflected that every minute lost left him farther away from his fiancee; that two hours, perhaps, before it would be possible for the chief of the people to reassemble his friends, Corcelli and his band would have reached their retreat; and that, before all, it should be ascertained to what place the brigands were taking their victims. Then he rushed on in their tracks. He pursued them with the obstinacy of despair, despite fatigue, despite his wound, until, overcome at length with lassitude, he fell in the middle of the road, crying with rage.

The unfortunate man dragged himself back as far as the faubourg of Loreto, which he reached at dawn. He entered the inn. The remains of the orgie were still there. The floor was covered with debris; the lamps that had been left burning were shooting up their last feeble flames, which were struggling against the first rays of day. In the midst of some broken bottles, overturned tables and benches, Pietro espied a man asleep. It was Conrad, drunk as a lord. The smuggler approached the wretch, and shook him rudely. But Conrad did not open his eyes. He contented himself with grumbling, stammering between his wine-seasoned lips at every shake some frightful German oath, and continued to sleep with invincible stubbornness. So Pietro awoke the poor Cappucino.

"There was an orgie in your house last night?" he said interrogatively.

"Ah! don't mention it, signor mio carissimo," replied the innkeeper. "The rascals ate more olla-podrida and smoked ham and drank more wine than would have been necessary to feed and quench the thirst of all the King's cavalry for a whole week. Cara mio," added the innkeeper in a plaintive and wheedling voice, "do you know Masaniello?"

"Undoubtedly."

"They promised me that this good Masaniello, this excellent Masaniellino, this excellentissimo piccolo Masaniellinello, would settle their bill. Do you think they spoke the truth?"

"How can I know?"

"Since you are the friend of Masaniello—God bless him!"—pursued Il Cappucino, "persuade him to count me out the twenty ducats' worth that these gormandizers devoured."

"Listen," replied Corinne's lover, "you will be paid if you obey."

"How can I obey? santa Maria del Carmine!"

"One of these dogs has remained with you?"

"Yes, a frightful German, signor mio, who couldn't get enough olla-podrida in his porringer, nor enough ham on his plate, nor enough wine in his glass."

"Prevent him from going out till my return."

"You will return soon?—for if I should have to feed him ——"

"You will feed him."

"Quench his thirst?"

"Quench his thirst."

"And this, dear Masaniello will pay me all that?"

"All, to the last maravedi."

Il Cappucino bowed his head and began to reflect.

"When this German wakes up," he said, "he will drink ten bottles of wine and eat six reaus' worth of sauerkrout; that's the way one must calculate. Well, signor cavaliero, since I have got involved in this affair, quite against my will, I will risk one or two ducats more, to try to recover last night's expense. Go and find this dear Masaniello, and, above all, return before the dinner-hour."

"Count on me."

"By-the-bye, here is my little bill. I can't reduce it a copper; don't forget it."

Pietro took the paper which Il Cappucino handed to him, threw a last glance at Conrad, and, having passed round him two or three times, to acquaint himself well with the rogue he had to deal with, started for the Vicaria.

Masaniello had hung up his hammock in the guardroom, which formed a sort of antechamber to the Viceroy's bedchamber. Overwhelmed with fatigue, he had fallen into a painful and agitated sleep. He awoke in the the middle of the night, and sought with his eyes his furniture, his hut, and the vast horizon of the bay, which he was wont to behold through his window. All that had disappeared. Some open-work nerves, carved by a skillful chisel, divided the vault into four pendentives, from the top of which descended as many lustres with diamond-shaped crystals. The walls were covered with a rich wainscoting embellished with escutcheons stamped with armorial bearings. At intervals could be seen the large form of a knight in full armor; and these innumerable statues, stiff and motionless, resembled a fantastic army of giants.

A few pale moonbeams pierced the colored window-glasses and sifted mysterious lights over all objects. Half-rising in his hammock, Masaniello contemplated this strange sight for an instant; then, raising both hands to his forehead, murmured with fright:

"Where am I, heavens! where am I?"

Then there recurred to him the dramatic events of the revolution he had effected—the sanguinary battle on the market-place; that of the Vicaria, still more desperate and sanguinary; his interview with the Duke of Arcos, with Dom Francesco, with Isabella ——

Francesco and Isabella! his conscience and love, between which a terrible struggle had begun.

There are moments in life when God illumines our souls with a light so pure, so resplendent, that our most precious and most dangerous illusions vanish, and we are able to appreciate with wonderful perspicacity the true value of the blessings of the present and the hopes of the future. One of these moments had come to Masaniello. He asked himself if he would be capable, he, a poor fisherman, a stranger to the science of man and things, to moderate, to lead on to liberty that popular revolution the first storms of which he had stirred up; if he could fight against the wily policy of the Duke of Arcos with his same simplicity as a man of the people; in fine, if it were reasonable to think that a Viceroy of Naples, a first-class grandee of Spain, the proudest among the proudest nobles in the world, would ever consent to unite his daughter to a fisherman, a rustic, a rebel peasant. And Masaniello was tempted to accuse the providence of God of having made him too ignorant, too weak, too poor, too despised, to enact the immense role it had imposed upon him.

Then he imagined himself for an instant associated with the government of the Duke of Arcos, married to Isabella, separated, in a word, by an abyss from the peasants, fishermen, from all other serfs in whose midst he had lived up to that time. What would this people say of him—this people whose miseries he had wept over so much, and whose sacred cause he had made to triumph; this people whom he adored, this people who received his smallest word as a sufficient consolation for the most smarting evils, as a mandate that none had the right to disobey? In the eyes of these unfortunate beings he would become a renegade, a traitor; he would see the hatred that the Duke of Arcos had drawn towards himself turned on him.

Masaniello's head swam. He uttered a cry of agony, like a man who loses his balance, and totters, without being able to find a prop, over the chasm at the bottom of which he is to be crushed.

The sun had risen brilliantly behind the hills overlooked by Vesavius. Ischia, Procida, Capri rose like water-nymphs crowned with wrack-grass out of the blue sea whose azure blended with the sky. Pausilippo, Virgil's tomb, the convent of the Camaldules, the dark walls of Saint Elmo castle, were growing purple in the first lights of day.

Naples was awaking. The thousand voices of the people were beginning to rustle around the great basilics with their marble cupolas or thin spires surmounted with shining crosses. The narrow streets overhung by dentated roofs, were filled with murmurs far and near.

Dom Francesco had risen early. He knew that his cherished child had need of his old experience to stand firm upon the slippery summit to which the powerful arm of the people had raised him. The Benedictine presented himself at the palace towards the first hour, and was immediately shown into the presence of Masaniello.

The fisherman hastened to conduct him to the council-chamber, where they locked themselves up, so as not to be disturbed.

"Thou hast not slept, my son," said the monk to Masaniello, whose cheeks were pale and his eyes red with weeping.

"No," replied the young man; "the weight I carry on my shoulders is crushing me. Yesterday I felt strong and resolute, to-day I feel weak and almost hopeless."

"Courage, Masaniello, courage! Woe to him who looks back after having put his hand to the plough!"

"Yes, oh yes! woe to me, for pride has ruined me! Alas why am I not still the poor fisherman of the bay of Naples, who joyously stretched his nets in the evening and slept peacefully while waiting for the fish God would send him!"

"Dost thou regret thy victory?" asked Dom Francesca, whose searching eye questioned his pupil's face.

"The future terrifies me."

"Thou art supporting a just cause, thou hast accomplished a glorious revolution. Follow up thy work perseveringly, be faithful to thy promises, accomplish without worldly considerations the mission thou hast received to liberate the people of Naples, and God will inspire thee with resolutions that save; He will give thee the strength that triumphs over perils."

"Those who surround me are numberless."

"The people await their salvation from thee. It is to-day that the reign of order and liberty must be founded on the ruins of the Spanish domination."

"Have you a line of conduct to dictate to me, Dom Francesco?"

"On leaving you yesterday I drew up the plan of a new constitution. Listen to it, Masaniello."

And the monk began his reading:

"In the name of the Holy Trinity, Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and conformably to the principles of the Scriptures, I, Masaniello, fisherman of Naples and chief of the people, declare that which follows:

"The King of Spain and his posterity are forever dispossessed of the throne of Naples.

"The form of government will be republican, founded on election."

Masaniello let a movement of impatience escape him. Dom Francesco feigned not to perceive it, and pursued:

"There shall be elected every three years in the bosom of the Neapolitan Republic by an assemblage of all the citizens, no matter what may be their condition and circumstances, a council of ten, charged with the making of laws. Every Neapolitan may form a part of this council.

"A chief magistrate, appointed in the same manner, shall have the mission to watch over the preservation of the constitution and to attend to the execution of the laws. His function shall endure two years and he will take the title of Tribune.

"By special regulations provision shall be made for the independence and regularity of the elections.

"All civil institutions shall be based on the principles of equality, liberty and fraternity proclaimed by Christ.

"Done in the name of the people of Naples, at the palace of the Vicaria, the eighth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand six hundred and forty-seven."

"I have no objection to make to this plan in itself," said Masaniello when the monk had finished reading, "for it embraces a manner of governing nations of which I know no example nor have any idea."

"It is Venice, minus her aristocracy."

"Very good, Father. But tell me, do you think the King of Spain will permit us to establish our republic without defending his rights?"

"Thou hast vanquished him with the aid of the people; with the people thou wilt vanquish him again.

"And with what will we oppose his fleet?"

"With the cannon of the forts we are about to conquer again."

"And his armies?"

"If thou understandeth thy duties well, Masaniello, if thou knowest how to rouse the people to-morrow as thou didst rouse them yesterday, our fields will be their tombs."

The fisherman shook his head with an incredulous air.

"In short," said the monk, "thou didst proclaim from the top of this terrace the forfeiture of Philip IV!—thou didst say it thyself the night I guided thy steps through the catacombs. Thou canst not abandon the cause of the people at this hour without committing a dastardly act, without covering thyself with infamy."

"Time brings counsel, Dom Francesco. The Duke of Arcos holds New Castle, Ovolo Castle, the forts of the Mole and Saint Elmo Castle. He can make a heap of ruins of Naples in a few hours. We are without defense."

"Are not the aqueducts cut? Will not the want of water force the Viceroy to surrender?"

"Besides, we have no money. I had the whole Vicaria carefully searched last evening from the roofs to the cellars, and we found nothing. I have to pay Corcelli twenty thousand ducats to make him take his brigands far from Naples, and I possess not a real. How can one create troops, how can one arm them with that?"

"Make an appeal to thy brothers. The Neapolitans will not refuse to buy their independence by sacrificing a few ducats."

"Then, instead of lessening the burdensome taxes, that were the cause of the revolution, we will double them? No, father, that shall not be."

"Everything is impossible for him who has no more faith in his cause," said the Benedictine woefully.

"Our fathers were happy formerly under the rule of the charter which Charles V had granted them," replied Masaniello. "They loved Spain then; they flew to arms to defend her. Let us therefore exact the return of the rights acknowledged by this act, and of which we were so unjustly robbed."

"In other words, you wish to treat with the Viceroy."

"And restore to him the authority that is crushing me with its might," added the fisherman.

"Alas! my ideas are not ripe yet, since my son himself does not comprehend them!" said the monk, sighing. "Masaniello, believe me, thou wilt be deceived!"

"The Duke of Arcos will reflect well before setting a trap for me. I am a simple man, but a courageous one, and they would find little profit in wishing to dupe me. Moreover, you will not forsake me, Dom Francesco; you will be my guide, my adviser. Oh, pardon me if I find your ideas inapplicable. It would require the shedding of so much blood to realize them."

"Let us speak about it no more," returned the Benedictine.

He approached Masaniello, took his hands affectionately and, questioning him with his eyes, continued:

"Swear to me that the memory of Isabella has not influenced thy resolutions. Masaniello, I have occasion for believing it; for, notwithstanding our dissents, thou has not ceased to be my dearly beloved son."

A deep blush rose to the young man's forehead, and he could only stammer a few incoherent words. It was Pietro who drew him from his embarrassing position.

T. B. PETERSON & BROS. of Philadelphia have issued from their press "The Prairie Flower" and its sequel, "Leoni Leoti," by Emerson Bennett, in one volume; paper-cover, 75 cents. The scene of the story is laid in the far West, and the book is filled with exciting incidents, in which hunters, trappers and Indians figure.

BASEBALL.

NEW YORK vs. BOSTON.

The second game between the New York and Boston Clubs took place at the Polo Grounds May 2, when there was a marked falling off in the attendance, not over three thousand people being present. Those who were there enjoyed a most exciting contest, and they were spectators of a very striking illustration of the value of skillful base-running. The two teams were nearly the same as in the preceding contest, save that the New Yorks put in Ward to pitch, with Welch at centre-field, and the Bostons replaced Buffinton, with Hackett at centre-field. The home-team led off with a run on errors by Wise and Hines, and in the fourth inning the score stood at 2 to 0, Ward's hit and clever base-running, together with a wide throw by Hines and a base on balls by Whitney, giving the additional run. For six successive innings the Reds failed to score, and made only three hits. In the seventh inning, however, Whitney hit safely, then Sutton sent the ball flying over the outfielders' heads, easily securing third base and earning Whitney's run. Wise also hit safely and earned Sutton's run, and by Burdock's pretty right-field hit two men were on earned bases with two runs in, and things began to look serious for the New-Yorkers. Ward, however, by splendid pitching, put the next three men out. This made the game even, and it remained so up to the ninth inning, when the Reds were put out for a blank, despite the fact that Burdock made a three-base hit. Connor, after one man was out, hit a high-foul, which Hines dropped. After this life Connor made a long hit to centre-field, which easily gave him his third base; but he was badly coached into running home, and was put out on the home-plate. Ward now went to the bat with two men out, and Hines gave him a life similar to that he gave Connor. After this escape he made a hard hit to left-field, which went beyond the line of carriages, and by fast running Ward got to the home-plate just as the ball reached Hines, but it was dropped, and the game was won literally by clever base-running and sharp fielding, and nothing else. The score:

The Most Exciting Match of All.

Three successive victories scored by the New York League players over so strong a team as that of Boston is something the Metropolitan Company have a right to feel elated at, especially as they were achieved under circumstances well calculated to test the strength of the local club and to develop the weak as well as the strong points of the team. In these three contests the New York team have shown great strength in the three most important elements of success, viz., in their battery-work, their fielding-support and their base-running; and lastly they have exhibited their ability in one form of batting, as was shown in the fact of their punishment of so swift a curve-pitcher as Whitney, the New-Yorkers, in the three games earning 10 runs, and scoring 25 base-hits off his pitching in 25 innings' play. On the other hand the Bostons, good hitters as they are, earned only 3 runs off Ward's pitching in fifteen innings' play, and scored 13 base-hits; while off Welch's pitching they earned only 4 runs and scored 13 base-hits in 12 innings' play. It was left to the last game of the series to develop another strong point in the play of the New York team in a match, and that was their ability to contest an uphill game with all the steadiness and pluck of the old Atlantics. The umpiring, too, was not in favor of New York, for while Decker, in our opinion, impartially discharged the onerous duties of his position, despite of some jeering by the local crowd and adverse press-criticisms, his mistakes were certainly not in favor of New York. In fact, it is rare to see three such important matches won so completely on their merits as these games were. Moreover, the triumph of the New York team was one characterized by the marked success of skillful strategic pitching over mere speed and the curve in the delivery of the ball. The game played on the 3d was decidedly the most exciting of the three, and it roused up the assemblage of nearly four thousand people to a great pitch of enthusiasm. This time the liveliest kind of hitting came into play on both sides, and that, too, against first-class pitching. Home-runs scored against such a pacer in pitching as Whitney are not frequent during a season, while three-base hits against Ward and Welch are almost as rare. A curious fact in the batting was that the longest hits of the game should be made by the lightest weight of the New York team, the majority of whom are of the stalwart order. In this contest the home-team led off with a score of 1 to 0, but before the end of the third inning the total had been changed to 5 to 1 in favor of the Bostons. Moreover, the character of the play in these three innings was such as to show that, not only was it an off-day for the New-Yorkers in fielding, but that the Bostons were in remarkably strong batting form, as was shown by their punishment of such an effective pitcher as Welch. In the third inning the home-team made a change in their pitcher, Ward going in in the place of Welch, who had been hit in three innings for two earned runs and six base-hits. The change proved to be a good one, as it at once checked the advance of the enemy, and began to encourage the home-forces in recovering their lost ground. In the fourth the Bostons added only a single unearned run to their score, though six men went to the bat; while, on the other side, after two men were out, Ward further encouraged the New Yorks by scoring a clean home-run just in the nick of time. This proved to be the beginning of a fine rally at the bat by the New Yorks, and, as the Reds failed to hit Ward's pitching, the result of the next two innings' play was the addition of four runs to the Yorks' score, while that of the Bostons remained as before. In the seventh inning hits by Wise and Burdock, aided by a wild pitch, gave the Reds two runs, one being earned by Burdock's three-base hit, secured by sharp running chiefly. Once more, after two men were out, Ward came to the rescue with a clean home-run, and by the good hits of Gillespie and Clapp another run was added, two being earned, thereby tieing the Boston score by 8 to 8, amidst wild enthusiasm among the crowd. In the eighth the Reds added an unearned run to their score by Welch's drop of a fly-ball, but in the same inning, Welch compensated for this error by a telling three-base hit, which by Hankinson's safe hit gave another earned run, and once more tied the score—9 to 9. Now came the most exciting inning of the contest, the crowd watching the play as the Bostons went in with intense eagerness. Ward, however, was equal to the occasion, and the result was that the Reds were pitched out in succession. On the home-side, as Connor went to the bat, a safe hit was looked for. Captain Burdock, however, had made a change in his forces, Morrill going in to pitch, while Whitney went to first base, a position he cannot play well. The result was that Connor was given his base on balls, and while on first Ward made a sacrifice-hit of a ball to Whitney, who muffed it, and Ward reached first base safely. Gillespie then forced out Connor at third, Ward getting to second before a double-play could be made. Clapp now came to the rescue with a safe right-field bounder, and Ward ran home like a deer—the ladies in the gallery said "like a dear"—and once more did New York come in victors. Of the play of the Bostons in these games, we have to speak in the highest terms of Morrill's first-base play, he having some very hard throwing to cover. Hines' catching, too, against such a hot fire was noteworthy; Sutton's third-base play and Hornung's left-fielding were also up to the highest mark. As for Burdock, he was always in the right spot at the right time. The weak spot was at centre-field, where Hackett failed to judge either the batsmen or the balls well. On the part of the New Yorks, the feature of their play was Ewing's throwing to bases, the general field-support, too, being first-class. Score:

RELEASED.—Gus Shallix, one of the catchers, and Martin Barrett, one of the catchers, of the Quickstep Club of Wilmington, Del., have been released. McKinnon, the first-baseman of the Philadelphias, will most likely be released in a few days, when Farrer will fill his position. McKinnon has been suffering from malaria, and his physician has certified that he is unfit to play. Tom Gill has been released by the Trentons.

CHARLES H. AUSTIN was chosen secretary of the Westchester County League at a special meeting held April 25 in Mount Vernon, N. Y. A schedule of championship games was then adopted.

THE ATTICA (IND.) REDS will present the following team: Leopold, catcher; Mulford and Merrill, pitchers; McDermond, Patterson and Bowen on the bases; Peacock, short-stop; and Cassell, Cunningham and Wilson in the outfield.

THE IRVING CLUB of this city would like to hear from all clubs having inclosed grounds. Address George Loser, 116 Chrystie street, New York City.

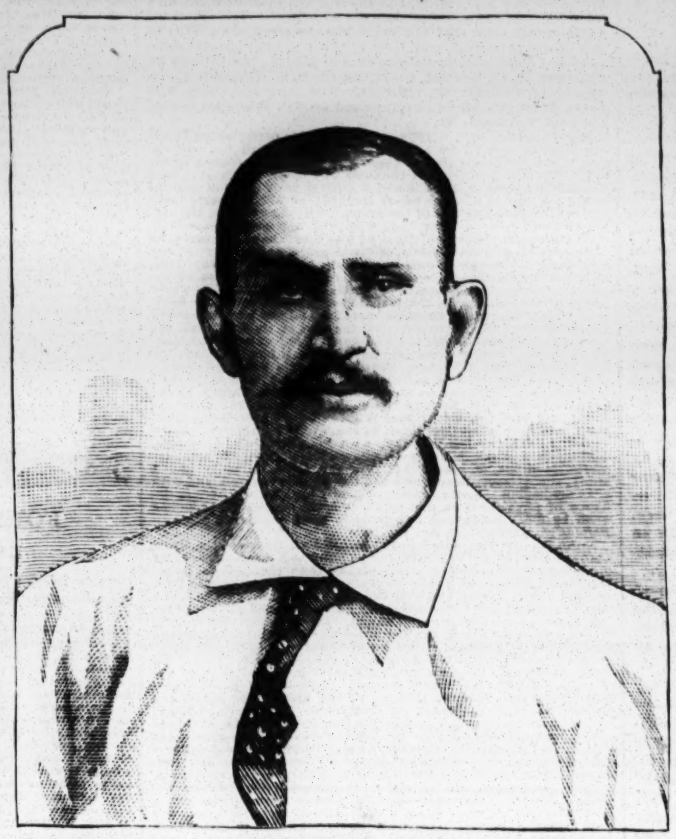
DENNY MACK is now temporarily residing in Hokendauqua, Lehigh County, Pa. He was negotiating with the Albany Club, but is still disengaged.

TOM GILL, late short-stop of the Trentons, has returned to Brooklyn, N. Y., and will manage the business of his father, who died recently.

THE BOSTON LAW-SCHOOL NINE defeated the Tufts College team April 27 in Boston, Mass., by a score of 16 to 14 in eight innings.

BROUTHERS' BIG BROTHER is announced to guard first base for the Albany Club.

CHARLES W. REIPSCHLAGER,



one of the catchers of the Metropolitan Club, was born about twenty-eight years ago in this city. He began ball-playing in 1872, when he was connected with the Silver Stars—at that time the champion amateur organization of his native city. While playing with the Silver Stars he alternated as catcher and first-base with "Nealy" Phelps, who was for many years the gatekeeper at the Union Grounds, Brooklyn. For several seasons he caught for the leading amateur clubs of this city, his first out-of-town engagement being in 1877 as catcher of the co-operative team of Orange, N. J. In 1878 he opened with the Auburn Club as catcher to Welch's pitching, afterwards played in a few games with the new Albany nine, and then finished the season with the professional team of Worcester, Mass. He caught for the New Bedford nine in 1879 and for the Jersey City team in 1880, playing also as catcher in the latter year in a few games with the Albany nine and the then newly-organized Metropolitan Club of this city. Reipschlager early in 1881 accepted an engagement with the Nationals of Washington, alternating with Trott as catcher. He then joined the Atlantics of Brooklyn, under Barnie's management, and his clever catching materially helped that co-operative professional team during the remainder of the season of 1881. He took part that season in two remarkable contests, one being played in this city Aug. 9, when the Atlantics managed to crawl out of a very tight place by making no fewer than eleven runs in the ninth inning, and the other taking place in Philadelphia Aug. 17, when the Athletics also accomplished the same extraordinary batting feat of making eleven runs at the finish. Reipschlager's services were secured in 1882 by the Metropolitan Club as one of its catchers, and that Manager Mutrie's confidence in him was not misplaced was clearly proven by his effective work behind the bat during the past season. He has been re-engaged by the Metropolitan Club for this season, and is regarded as a most promising player in his position, although of slight build. He is also a good batsman and base-runner, and generally manages to get in his share of the runs credited to his side.

PROVIDENCE vs. PHILADELPHIA.

The above-named clubs opened the League championship season in Philadelphia, Pa., May 1, when the attendance was small, only one thousand people being present. The home-team led off with two earned runs on safe hits by Purcell and McClellan (the latter's being a drive over the right-field fence for two bags), aided by sacrifice hits. Safe hits by Harbidge and Ringo gave the Philadelphias in the seventh inning their third and last run. The visitors were blanked until the eighth inning, when Radbourn was given his base on balls instead of being called out on strikes. Four successive safe hits, including a two-bagger by Hines, then sent four runs in, and gave the victory to the Providence team. Purcell wrenched his leg in running the bases, and this lost the home-team a chance of tieing the score in the eighth inning. Farrar, who took McKinnon's place at first base, fielded finely in his position, and excellent catches were made by Purcell and Start. The score:

Another exciting contest between these teams took place May 2, when only about five hundred persons were present. The visitors were given a run in the first inning on a wild throw by Ferguson and a questionable decision by the umpire on Manning's throw to the home-plate. The lead thus secured was held throughout, no more runs being scored by either side until the ninth inning, when the Providences bunched four safe hits, including two-baggers by Denny and Hines, and made three runs while the Philadelphias earned their only run on two-baggers by Henderson and Manning. The umpiring was again decidedly unsatisfactory, both clubs suffering thereby. The home-team did the best fielding, but again failed to bat Radbourn's very effective pitching. Henderson took Purcell's place at left-field. Farrell's fine second-base play was the fielding feature, he accepting all of the eleven chances offered. Radbourn led in batting. Score:

Another small assemblage witnessed the third game between these clubs May 3, when the result was a walk-over for the Providence nine. Henderson was put in to pitch in Coleman's place, and was pounded all over the field, twenty-six safe hits earning thirteen runs, while miserable fielding gave the visitors eleven more runs. Hines and Irwin each made five safe hits, and the former twice drove the ball over the fence at left-centre. Harbidge, who caught most of the time without a mask, was twice hit in the face by foul tips, and gave way to Ringo in the eighth inning. The score:

CLEVELAND vs. BUFFALO.

The League season in Cleveland, O., was opened May 1 by the home-team defeating the Buffalos before eighteen hundred spectators. The weather was cold, and errors were consequently numerous. Kennedy alone did any batting for the visitors. Derby pitched wildly, and was hit hard. The score:

The Clevelands met with their first defeat this season May 2 at the hands of the Buffalos. The visitors bunched six safe hits, including a three-bagger by Brouthers, in the sixth and ninth innings, and earned their three runs. The Clevelands' hits were too scattered to admit of run-getting. Dunlap did some wonderful fielding, including two remarkable one-handed catches. Score:

Earned runs—Buffalo, 3. Two-base hits—O'Rourke, Glasscock, Dunlap. Three-base hit—Brouthers. First base on balls—Cleveland, 2. First base on errors—Cleveland, 2; Buffalo, 1. Struck out—Cleveland, 2; Buffalo, 4. Double-plays—Dunlap and Phillips and Glasscock, Dunlap and Phillips. Passed ball—Rowe, 1. Umpire, W. E. Furlong. Time, 1h. 45m.

The above result would have been reversed May 3, had not Phillips made a wild throw that gave the Buffalos their only run. Errors by White and Rowe, and a single by Dunlap and a three-bagger by Bradley, aided by two passed balls, gave the Clevelands their three runs. Bradley fielded finely in Glasscock's place, the latter having injured himself in the preceding game. York made a splendid running-catch in the sixth inning with the bases full, and threw out O'Rourke at the home-plate. McCormick only pitched three balls in the fifth inning in retiring the side, and held the Buffalos down to four safe hits in all. The score:

CHICAGO vs. DETROIT.

Hard hitting and almost faultless fielding marked the opening contest of the League championship series in Detroit, Mich., May 1, when the weather was fine and the attendance large. Gore retired at the end of the third inning sick, and Corcoran took his place. Errors by Quest and Mansell gave the Chicagos two runs and the lead in the second inning. In the fourth the Detroits took the lead by scoring two runs on Powell's single and Bennett's home-run. The Chicagos bunched five successive safe hits in the seventh inning, which gave them five earned runs and the victory. The score was:

These clubs met again on the same grounds May 2, when threatening weather accounted in part for the diminished attendance. The game was not so well played as the preceding one, but was closely contested throughout, the score being a tie at the end of the eighth inning. The Chicagos won in the ninth inning, when Flint's two-baser, Farrell's fumble and Pfeffer's three-bagger combined to bring in two runs. Score:

JOHN B. DORIS' GREAT INTEROCEAN SHOW, in spite of bad weather, has been doing a large business through the States of New York and New Jersey, and reports say that the tents were often too small to accommodate the audiences. The appended press-notices show that the performances given are worthy of this liberal patronage, and that they are giving general satisfaction. Route ahead: Johnstown, Pa., May 9, East Liberty 10, Pittsburg 11, 12, Wooster, O., 14, Massillon 15, Akron 16, Cleveland 17, 18, Erie, Pa.; then through New York State and New England. A reliable and experienced woman is wanted to take charge of the wardrobe.

DORIS' INTEROCEAN CIRCUS.—After a week's performance Doris' Circus withdraws for its annual tour, crowned with the admiration of the discriminating, to whom the symmetry, compactness, originality and excellence of the show was most satisfying. To a menagerie chosen with skill and a critical knowledge of natural history is joined a circus which includes among its performers the greatest living artists of the arena. William Showles, the daring bareback-rider, accomplishes apparent impossibilities and utterly disregards the laws of gravity; Miss Ella Stokes, the bareback equestrienne, performs deeds of equal grace and daring; Prince Satsuma's Japanese circus is unique and impressive; Prof. Wingfield's dog-circus discourse the highest intelligence of the canine; the Siegrist Brothers show the utmost limits to which acrobatic skill can reach; the trapeze performance of Millie Tournour is a revelation of woman's strength and courage; and every act performed in the circles was the best of its kind, and the kind was infinite. Zazel, the woman shot out of a powder-loaded cannon, is simply a marvel; for, explain it how we may, the fact remains that a human, breathing being is propelled from a position of inertia with sufficient force to traverse sixty feet of space to a lodgment in the dome of the tent. Applying the formula to bodies at rest, their weight, the space traversed, the speed attained, the motor that is effective without being fatal, must continue a bewilderment to the excited audience. Millie Christine, the two-headed lady, with four arms and four legs, uniting in a single body, is a remarkable—perhaps the most remarkable—freak of nature yet discovered. A curiosity and a study, she attracts the curious and the scientific as well, and both alike are baffled. Mentally and physically healthy, she lives in defiance of physical laws, and probably has been and will be looked upon by more wondering human eyes than any living object.—Philadelphia Transcript, April 15, 1883.

WONDERS OF THE CIRCUS-RING—HOW THE SEASON WAS BRILLIANTLY OPENED BY THE INTEROCEAN SHOW.—A brighter, prettier or more generally pleasing street-parade than that of J. B. Doris' Interocean Circus and Menagerie yesterday was never seen in Philadelphia. The horses and wild beasts were in fine condition, the chariots, wagons and vans were very handsome, and the trappings and banners rich, beautiful and varied. The pageant moved over all the principal streets, and the sidewalks were literally jammed with people. On Broad street an elephant named "Hunki-dori" spied a tempting stand full of peanuts on the sidewalk. Forgetting for a moment his keeper's spear, "Hunki" lumbered through the crowd, and with his trunk scooped half-a-bushel of the nuts into his mouth. Then he thought of the keeper and spear, and plunged back into the line of the procession. The parade, followed by an immense crowd, returned to the show-grounds on Broad street, below Dickinson, shortly after two o'clock. No matinee was given. In the evening, however, a great crowd witnessed the first entertainment. The ring-show began at eight o'clock and continued three hours, and the riders, acrobats, tumblers, jugglers, trapeze-performers and specialists delighted everyone present. William Showles, the bareback-rider, worked the audience up to fever-heat by his grace and skill, and scores of rival showmen who were present expressed the opinion that he is a finer equestrian than James Robinson or Charles Fish. Zazel was fired from a cannon to a trapeze sixty feet away, and then dove headlong into a net a few feet above the ground. These daring feats were accomplished so successfully that many of the auditors cheered. Professor Wingfield's troupe of trained dogs were heartily applauded, and a ladder-act by Fredericks, La Van and Gloss created a sensation. Miss Sallie Marks and Miss Ella Stokes rode gracefully, and a trio of clowns, led by funny Johnny Patterson, kept everyone in a delightful humor. The Siegrist Bros. performed a series of wonderful acrobatic feats. Satsuma exhibited his unequaled skill in juggling oddly-shaped articles with his feet, and dozens of other specialists tumbled and contorted themselves, revolved on horizontal-bars, danced on flying-trapezes, and did all sorts of clever and amusing things.—Philadelphia Times, April 10, 1883.

DORIS' INTEROCEAN CIRCUS, taking all things into consideration, is the finest and best organization on the road this season.—Philadelphia Enquirer.

CROWDED TENTS seem to be the order of the day at Broad and Federal streets. Doris' Great Interocean Circus is giving universal satisfaction. Many features of the show are entirely new. Mr. Doris deserves great credit for his able management.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

GOOD ATTENDANCE—RECEPTION OF MILLIE CHRISTINE.—The circus this afternoon was largely attended, and the performance is well spoken of by all. The ring artists are better than the average, and many novelties have been introduced since last year that were very pleasing. The bareback-riding of William Showles, Sallie Marks and Ella Stokes was very fine, and elicited hearty applause. The performing dogs under Prof. Wingfield is a whole show in itself, and worth twice the price of admission. The juggling of Prince Satsuma and the trapeze acts of Millie Tournour were excellent. The three clowns, the best in the profession, are led by Johnny Patterson, the great Irish clown and humorist; also Francois Kenebel, French trick-clown; Geo. E. Drew, original Hebrew-dialect clown. The three clowns were all good, and a decided improvement on the atrocious wits that are so frequently palmed off on the people. Other features of interest were the acrobatic and gymnastic feats of the Russian Athletes—Fredericks, Gloss and La Van—the Siegrist and the La Marten Brothers. Miss Christine, it should be mentioned, the two-headed lady, was warmly received. Professor Nate Davis' trained elephants, Miss Ella Stokes' bareback-riding and many other features could be spoken of highly and at length, would space permit. There were present this afternoon between 3,000 and 4,000 people.—The Binghamton (N. Y.) Daily Leader, April 30.

DOESN'T MAKE PEOPLE CROSS-EYED.—The Binghamton News notes that the one-ring performance of J. B. Doris' Great Show does not make the spectators cross-eyed. It is a fact that when there are two or three rings one misses whatever is taking place in more than one. All notices of the Doris Show are of a flattering character, and our people are well entertained.—Daily Advertiser, Elmira, N. Y., May 4.

LOOKING AT MILLIE CHRISTINE.—Dr. Purdy, Dr. Weaver, Dr. Pratt and others went to see the wonderful double woman, Millie Christine, at the Doris Show this afternoon. They pronounced her a remarkable being. About 3,500 people attended the show.—The Gazette-Free Press, Elmira, N. Y., May 4.

AMATEUR.

"IOLANTHE," which was given during the whole of the past week at the Leland Opera-house, Albany, N. Y., by amateurs, attracted paying audiences, while the treatment the opera received at the hands of the local talent was, to say the least, highly creditable to all concerned. The stage was under the direction of A. D. Barker, a professional who was connected with the Standard Theatre, New York. The chorus was large, and handsomely costumed.

LATEST PRODUCTIONS.
"Le Pave de Paris"

("The Streets of Paris"), which was to have been produced in the Porte St. Martin, Paris, April 12, had to be postponed until 14, in consequence of M. Laray having sprained his ankle during the final dress-rehearsal.

The drama, which was the first production under the new management of Bernhardt & Simon, is from the pen of Adolphe Belot. He depicts the "seamy side" of life, so we meet with a select variety of costermongers, rag-pickers, street-sweepers, etc., not omitting a few policemen, who serve as pegs on which to hang views of scenes in modern Paris that are curious in a high degree. Indeed, scenery and interpretation are the best features of the new piece. The simple story, which is the thread joining the tableaux together, is far from original. A little girl had been left during the Franco-German War in charge of a nurse in a Lorraine village, and the woman having been killed, with all her family, Marie is supposed to have perished with them. She is alive, however, and when the Germans annex the province comes to Paris under the care of an honest fellow named Fusch in search of some means of earning her bread. They arrive at the Strasbourg terminus in the early morning, a scene which gives us the first glimpses of those types of the lower stratum of Parisian life which M. Belot has set himself to portray in the piece. Fusch and Marie are friendless in the big city, but the former has the luck to pick up in the street a programme addressed to all wanting situations, who have only to apply to the offices of one Bonneau, at the Halle au Ble, or corn-market, the curious circular building near the Rue St. Honore and the central markets, well known to Paris visitors. Bonneau is an adventurer himself, having come to Paris with a small capital already exhausted in quest of fortune. Fusch and Marie are his first customers, and they bring him good luck. For a woman named Bellegentier, who keeps a questionable table d'hote, one of those establishments in which clandestine gaming is carried on, and where vice of all kinds is pandered to, is on the lookout for pretty faces to render her place attractive; and, coming to Bonneau's agency while Marie is there, she makes an offer to the innocent little girl, who gladly accepts it. Bonneau thereupon engages Fusch as his confidential clerk, and when looking through the books and correspondence of the Bonneau's predecessor in the agency the pair discover that a search had begun to be set on foot for a young girl who had disappeared during the German invasion, and is supposed to be dead. She was the child of M. and Madame de Launay; the father is dead, but the mother survives, and, if the daughter's death can be satisfactorily established, a fortune of three millions of francs will fall to the share of a certain Baron de Gerin, the nearest heir. It is the Baron who has set the inquiry on foot, and he soon makes his appearance to tempt Bonneau with the promise of 300,000f. in case of success to procure evidence of Mlle. de Launay's death. Whether it be genuine or fabricated Gerin does not in the least care. Fusch, who hears the conversation between his employer and the Baron, is at once convinced that the lost heiress is little Marie, and when he relates her history to Bonneau the latter also comes to the same conclusion. But, though Bonneau is not a dishonest or ill-meaning man, the bait held before his eyes by Gerin is tempting, and the audience is left in doubt as to which side he will finally take. Meanwhile Marie has run away from Madame Bellegentier's, being disgusted with the vile place, and the woman follows and overtakes her at the church of St. Eustache, opposite the market, where the vegetable women take part with the little girl in the dispute that arises between her and Madame Bellegentier. One of the richest stall-keepers in the market, Madame Peronne, becomes also engaged in the controversy, in the course of which she sends for her son, who is an officer in the municipal guard. Georges, when he arrives on the scene, recognizes in Marie a little girl whom in 1870 he had picked up wounded among the ruins of a Lorraine village razed to the ground by the Germans. From the moment that Madame Peronne takes Marie home with her the plot may be said to be at an end, for it is easy to forsee that Georges will fall in love with his mother's protegee, and that all will end well. However, a good scene between the young officer and Bonneau is to be noticed. The latter, with Fusch, having spent much time in searching for Marie, at last finds out her whereabouts, and Bonneau presents himself at Madame Peronne's house, where he questions Marie in such a manner as to excite the curiosity of Georges, and when left alone together the young man so adroitly interrogates and flatters him that he reveals the truth. The great scene of the play is very ingeniously contrived. Gerin has bribed another penniless and unscrupulous "aristocrat" like himself to murder Marie in the little room she occupies at the top of Mme. Peronne's house; but when Fusch gives the alarm all the inmates are at once put in commotion, and a hunt for the aggressors furnishes occasion for what may be called the panorama of the many stories of a tall Paris house. There is a turning staircase, with moving scenery behind and at the wings, which affords a singularly accurate picture of the various apartments from roof to cellar, and at last we reach the cellar itself, and have a glimpse of the tunnel on the Western Railway line near St. Lazare terminus—for Madame Peronne lives on the Boulevard des Batignolles—and finally of the terminus itself, where the culprits are captured after jumping into a passing train, all this being complicated, curious, and well carried out. It is the original feature of the drama. In the end Madame de Launay, a grande dame, living in the Faubourg St. Germain, is discovered, and she consents without difficulty to her daughter's marriage with Georges. This story, trite though it be, is narrated in such simple and touching terms by M. Belot that it produces at times a very tearful effect on a Porte St. Martin audience, and the scenery is so good that the piece will probably have a run of some duration. It is capitally played.

THE TURF.

PAPER-CHASING.—The third paper-chase of the Country Club at Clyde Park, Brookline, Mass., Saturday afternoon, May 5, was satisfactory. The course was so laid out that the riders were within view for some time at both start and finish, so that the most exciting parts of the chase could be enjoyed by the members and their friends. Fred Prince was the hare, and among the hounds were Warren, Myers, Hubbard, Bigelow, G. H. and Hugh K. Norman, Hugh A. Allan, George Lee and Lawrence Horton. The word was given at 4.07, and five minutes later the hounds were off over the regular steeplechase course and over the usual number of walls, gates, water courses and stretches, closing with a circuit of the Park. Prince finished two seconds ahead of the hounds, of which George Warren was first and George L. V. Myers second.

THOROUGHBREDS BURNED.—J. A. Grinstead's stable at Blue-grass Park, Georgetown, Ky., was burned on the night of May 6. The fire was supposed to have been the work of an incendiary. Two stallions—imp. Thunderstorm, by Thunderbolt, dam Killarney, foaled in 1871 and imported by D. D. Withers, and Linestone, by War Dance, dam Transylvania, foaled in 1870 by the late A. Keene Richards—and six yearlings by Thunderstorm were destroyed by the flames. Mr. Grinstead's loss is estimated at over ten thousand dollars.

THE FRENCH 2,000 GUINEAS, for three year-old colts, run at the Paris Spring meeting on April 22, was won by C. J. Lefevre's Regain, beating a field of nine. The distance is a mile, and the time reported 1:39¼. The 1,000 Guineas, for three-year-old fillies, over the same course, was won by M. A. Staub's Stockholm, who beat Count Legrange's Malibran and seven others in 1:40⅝. The weights for both races were 123lb.

RACING IN MEXICO.—At the Peralville course, at the City of Mexico, on Sunday, April 29, Pablo Escandons Aigle won the Jockey Club stakes of $2,500; Caracole second. Ten Broeck the Second, American horse, got fourth place. Edward Orrin's Kitty beat Thomas Moran's Flora. President Gonzalez and a brilliant company witnessed the races.

THE SCRATCHING of Thora, the favorite for the River Stakes at Nashville, on the morning of the race, May 2, elicited much comment there. Mr. Reed stated that the pen had been put through her name because her trainer had discovered the night previously that she was in season and wholly unfit for racing, which fact was reported to him next day.

NOW THAT the League Racing Board have passed a resolution to the effect that the twenty-mile race for a thousand-dollar cup, to take place at the Springfield (Mass.) Bicycle Club's September tournament, shall be the authorized League amateur championship race at the distance for 1883, efforts are being made to secure the five and ten mile races for the same meeting.

ELI MARKS, a well-known sporting man and "high-roller," having seen Drake Carter travel a mile near Louisville, Ky., in 1:47¼, playing with his head the while, on April 30, offered in print to wager from five hundred to five thousand dollars that said horse would beat any other named starter for the Kentucky Derby.

THE LARGE NUMBER of two hundred and seventy-six entries have been received for the seventeen events constituting the Summer trotting and pacing meeting of the Chicago (Ill.) Driving Park Association, for which premiums aggregating sixty thousand dollars are offered.

THE WESTMINSTER CUP of $2,500 in plate or specie, at option of winner, added to a sweepstakes of $100 each, a mile and a quarter, was run for at Kempton Park, Eng., May 4, and was won by R. Peck's Bercaldine (143lb); Tristan (146) second and Wallenstein (136) third. Four started.

NATIONAL LACROSSE ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the United States National Amateur Lacrosse Association was held May 5 at the Astor House, this city. The chair was occupied by J. Hodge Jr., Princeton College, and representatives from the New York, Princeton, N. Y. University, Columbia and Harvard Lacrosse Clubs and the Union Amateur A. C. of Boston were in attendance. The report of Secretary Flannery showed that of the 100 (about) clubs in the United States one-third were members of the Association, and that the organization was in a prosperous condition. It was voted to send a team to England next year, the sum of $5,000 having been guaranteed to pay the expenses of the trip. The selection of the persons to compose the team was entrusted to the N. Y. Club. The Chicago and Yale Lacrosse Clubs and the Adelphi Athletic Club of Brooklyn were admitted to membership. Secretary Flannery announced that he would offer a gold medal to the goal-keeper of the club winning the Oelrichs Cup this season, for which offer the thanks of the Association were tendered. Several amendments to the playing-rules were made, the more important being as follow: The most goals won to count in every match; challenging clubs may claim a time-limit of one and one-half hours, but play must continue for at least one hour and until at least one goal is won; all rest between goals to count as part of the required time; a player must be 30 days a resident of the city or place from which the club in which he is playing comes; members of college teams are permitted to play with any club during vacations, but must give at least one week's notice on changing from one club to another. The election for officers to serve during the year ensuing resulted as follows: Honorary president, Herman Oelrichs, New York; president, Erastus Wiman, New York; first vice president, J. Hodge Jr., Princeton; second vice-president, S. McDonald, Boston; third vice-president, H. Q. Harris, Louisville; secretary and treasurer, J. R. Flannery, New York; council—C. J. Reuter, Harvard College; E. P. Cottle, Yale College; A. T. Skerry Jr., New York University; J. Hawkhurst, Adelphi Athletic Club, Brooklyn, and D. A. Haasis, Columbia College.

HARVARD vs. N. Y. UNIVERSITY.

The initial match of the intercollegiate championship series between the lacrosse teams of these colleges was played at Prospect Park, Brooklyn, N. Y., May 5. About a thousand persons were interested spectators of the contest. The Harvards went into the match possessing that advantage over their opponents which weeks of practice gives, the New Yorkers, owing to lack of facilities, having been able to obtain but little practice. The teams were made up as follow: Harvard—Easton, goal; Davis (captain), point; Rueter, cover-point; Noble, Goodale, Hyland, defense; Williams, centre; Nichols, Roundy, Marquand, attack; Noyes, Wood, home. N. Y. University—Townsend, goal; Pearce, point; Gerndt, cover-point; Kingsley (captain), Tribus, Carpenter, defense; H. W. Skerry, centre; Pratt, Haskell, Roberts, attack; Crossett, Skerry, home. In the first game the New York players made a bold stand, stalling off the determined efforts of the Harvards to get the ball through, but finally Woods sent it there, thirty-five minutes having elapsed. The exertions of the Gothamites told on them when they faced again, and their defense was far from as good, Marquand putting the ball between the goal-posts in sixteen minutes. The New-Yorkers, now lost all hope, and the third game was taken from them in six minutes by Nichols. Referee, E. P. Cottle; umpires, Messrs. Bo ardman and Flannery.

NED MCNULTY of Ashland, O., and Harry Marshall of New Philadelphia are matched to run one hundred yards, for five hundred dollars a side and gate-money, at Akron, O., May 15. The start will be fifteen-foot scratch, and the race is play or pay, for the State championship.

THE Charlestown (Mass.) Bicycle Club has been formed, with twelve members. The officers are: President and captain, Charles W. Howard; secretary and treasurer, F. A. Parshley; first-lieutenant, F. S. Nelson; second-lieutenant, G. U. Fowle; bugler, T. S. Bryant.

ON SATURDAY, May 19, there will be a ten-mile professional match at the Casino, Boston, open to all New-Englanders, and one week later another race at the same place, same distance, open to all. Liberal prizes will be offered.

THE YALE COLLEGE Hare and Hounds Club had a run on the afternoon of April 28, ten hounds following the hares, C. J. Griggs and N. J. Adams, '86. The distance covered was about seven miles, and rain fell in torrents during a part of the time.

THE tennis tournament under the management of the Yale Athletic Association will be held on Saturday, May 19. Prizes will be given for singles and doubles.

THE Canadian amateur lacrosse team, accompanied by a team of Caughnawaga Indians, sailed for England on May 4.

A RUNNING-MATCH has been arranged between Andrew Harbinger and George Weaver, Albanians, to take place May 10 from Albany to Schenectady, N. Y., and return, a distance of 34 miles.

J. HAPPENY and L. E. Myers are informed of letters awaiting them at this office.

QUOITING AMONG THE QUAKERS.—On May 3 a number of expert disc-casters gathered at Goff's Steamboat Hotel, near Philadelphia, Pa., to enjoy their favorite sport. The first contest was a sweepstakes, 10 yards, between G. W. Breece, H. Adams, M. Dolan, J. Johnson and J. Goff. It was won by Breece by the following scores: First game, Breece 21, Johnson 15; second game, Goff 21, Adams 14; third game, Goff 21, Dolan 15; fourth game, Breece 21, Goff 19. A four-handed game followed, G. W. Breece and H. Adams of Philadelphia against J. Goff and J. Johnson of Chester, 15 yards, which was won by Goff and Johnson by the following scores: 21 to 14, 21 to 19, 21 to 11. Next was a four-handed match between the same players, 14 yards, which was won by Goff and Johnson; score, 21 to 16.....Brown was the winner of the tournament at Noah Makinson's, 2,436 Kensington avenue, May 5, scoring fifteen to Everett's six.

STEELE VS. PRICE.—The ten-mile running-match between William Steele of Morris Run, Pa., and Charley Price of this city, which is to be decided at the grounds of the Manhattan Athletic Club, this city, May 19, is looked forward to with much interest by those who patronize pedestrian sports, and it is expected to prove one of the finest contests ever witnessed here. Both men have been paying close attention to the business of preparing themselves for the meeting, and each expresses confidence in his ability to win. We are in receipt of Steele's final deposit of $150, although the articles do not call for it before May 12.

WILLIAMSBURG ATHLETIC CLUB.—The events, open to all amateurs, to be decided at the Spring meeting of this club, to be held at their grounds, Wythe avenue, Penn and Rutledge streets, Brooklyn, E. D., May 30, at 2.30 P. M., are as follow: 100yds., 250yds., half-mile, one-mile and five-mile handicap-runs, two-mile walk, 22yds. hurdle-race and two-mile bicycle-race. Silver cups will be given to first and second; to be on exhibition after May 16 at Schuyler's gun-store, 189 Broadway, this city. Handicapping by N. A. A. A. official handicapper. Entrance-fee, fifty cents. See "Closing of Entries."

SHUFFLEBOARD.—The first club tournament of the Newark Shuffleboard Association was played in Newark, N. J., May 1. There were two teams, which consisted of thirteen players each, chosen from the members by M. F. Pitney and P. O'Toole. One game was played by every member of one team against another member of the opposite team, and 25 points constituted a game. The possible number of points for the team was 325. O'Toole's team scored 295 against 238 made by Pitney's side. The game has become quite popular in that city, and over fifty boards are now in use there.

EIGHTY FIVE ENTRIES have been received for Arthur Chambers' All-American 135yds. handicap foot-race, to take place at Pastime Park, Philadelphia, May 14, 15. Among the short-start men are: Fred Rodgers, 7½yds.; J. T. Crossley, 10; G. Bruce, 12; Fish Carter, 13½; H. Chadwick, 13¾; J. Armitage, 14; W. Norris, 14½; J. Evans, 14½; E. Campbell, 14½; J. P. McQuigin, 14½; Fred Ernst, 15; H. Lake, 15; H. Creed, 15; G. McCrane, 15; and Jim Wheat, 16. These, with the other unnamed good men, ought to insure fine sport.

THE PROMOTER of the wrestling tournament at St. Louis, Mo., informs us under date of May 3 that the entries received up to that time included Clarence Whistler, D. C. Ross, Tom Cannon, Andre Christol, Tom Connor and Charles Bixermas. Wm. Muldoon, Joseph Acton and Edwin Bibby are among those who have not yet sent in their names, despite the inducements offered, which appears strange.

THE CITY COUNCIL of Springfield, Mass., have had under consideration an ordinance by the provisions of which every bicycle-rider is required to dismount whenever he is requested to do so by anyone who is driving a horse, the penalty for non-compliance being a fine of twenty dollars. The wheelmen of that section are bringing all the pressure they can to bear against the passage of a law calculated to occasion them no end of annoyance.

THE Toronto (Ont.) Prers Lacrosse Club met May 1 and elected the following officers: President, P. D. Ross; vice-president, A. C. Campbell; captain, Alex. P. Lowery; treasurer, C. A. Matthews; secretary, G. M. Harrington; committee—A. J. Magurn, T. McQueen, J. C. McLean, W. T. Canton and J. A. Ewan.

PRINCETON VS. COLUMBIA.—On Saturday, May 5, the lacrosse team of Columbia College journeyed to New Brunswick, N. J., and were slaughtered by the Princeton nine (that was the number of players on each side), who secured ten goals in forty-six minutes.

JACK WHITE, familiarly known as "The Gateshead Clipper," has been appointed official timekeeper and groundsman of the London Athletic Club, vice Bob Rogers, now in this country, under engagement to the New York A. C.

F. E. DAVIS, alias Cameron, winner of the recent 200yds. handicap at the Newhall Grounds, Sheffield, Eng., returned to this country last week.

STEVE O'DONNELL was awarded the palm in a collar-and-elbow exhibition wrestle with J. P. Ring at Gray's Opera-house, Williamsburg, L. I., May 4. He let the latter have the second fall.

PATRICK SHEA and Thomas M. Stacks wrestled in collar-and-elbow fashion, for fifty dollars a side, two in three fair back falls, at Manchester, N. H., May 5, Shea winning.

C. A. NEEDHAM has been elected secretary of the Pullman Athletic Club, vice E. Aspinwall resigned.

WE HAVE LETTERS for Edwin Bibby and Gus Lambert.

THE HARVARD CREW—Mumford (bow), Gilman, Belshaw, Ayers, Perkins, Hammond, Clarke and Sawyer (stroke)—were defeated on Saturday afternoon, May 5, between 5 and 6 o'clock by the Union eight of Boston in an informal brush of almost two miles, by a length and a third. The Unions led easily throughout, but both crews were well blown at the finish. The Harvards were handicapped by their new man, Ayers, who did very well under the circumstances. The Harvard boat was much the heavier. The Unions consisted of Jones (bow), Houghton, Eaton, Dana, Smith, Brigham, Williams and Bacon (stroke). The race arranged between the crews for May 10 has been abandoned by mutual consent, but a race will probably be arranged for '84.

GEORGE BUBEAR, who could not be coaxed into meeting George Lee on the Thames, now challenges "any bona fide resident" of England, Ireland or Scotland to row him over the Thames championship course for $500 or $1,000 a side; the challenge to remain open fourteen days; at the end of which time, should no acceptor appear, he will proclaim himself "Champion of England," a title supposed to belong to Edward Hanlan. But then the bold Putney sculler bars out non-residents, so that he need not fear any bugbear from this side the big pond.

WALLACE ROSS, in consequence of his engagement to row Hanlan, has declined an offer made him to take charge of the training of the Princeton College oarsmen, whose former trainer, George W. Lee, deemed it advisable to devote all his time and attention this season to securing the perfection of Hanlan and himself as a team who are open to row any other couple on reasonable terms as regards stakes, distance, date and location.

THE NEWARK BAY BOAT CLUB of Bayonne, N. J., have elected the following officers: President, E. C. Webb; vice-president, W. A. Holmes; recording secretary, J. D. Picklay; corresponding secretary, L. W. Amerman; treasurer, G. G. Jewett; assistant treasurer, A. C. Webb; captain, J. R. Raymond; lieutenant, E. McDonald.

GEORGE HOSMER, who will train the Princeton College four, left Boston for Princeton, N. J., May 2, accompanied by McKay, the sculler. He and McKay will row in the singles and doubles at Pullman, Ill., June 17. Hosmer's new single, fitted with new slides—an original device of young Meany, the oarsman—will be completed by Ruddock this week and taken to him by Dan Breen of the West-end crew.

THE NEW BOAT-HOUSE of the Crescent Boat Club of Boston is now ready for the reception of boats. The club will have fifteen boats on the racks in a very short time. The view is one of the best on the Charles River. The honorary membership is now almost four hundred.

THE CABLE announces the launching at Greenock, Scotland, of the new sixty-eight-ton cutter Marjorie, which will soon appear on the River Thames. She belongs to the same gentleman who owns the Madge, and is another possible challenger for the America Cup.

GEORGE THOMAS (24 years old, 5ft. 8½in., and weighing 134½lb) and James Lloyd (21 years, 5ft. 7¼in., 128lb) rowed a race for $125 a side on the Thames, from Putney to Mortlake, Eng., April 23. Thomas won by a length and three-quarters.

WIN OR LOSE with Peterson, P. J. McInerney says he will not make a match to row again on San Francisco waters, but will return to Massachusetts for the purpose of "taking on" Driscoll.

LACK of funds has prevented the Exeter Boat Club from carrying out their intention of purchasing boats from Harvard.

J. N. WATERBURY, N. Y. Y. C., has bought the steam-yacht Lurline.

J. J. ALEXANDRE, N. Y. Y. C., is the owner of the steam-yacht Venture, recently launched from the yard of S. H. Pine.

COULDN'T AGREE.

A meeting was held at the American House, Lowell, Mass., May 2, by Edward Hanlan and Thomas Spellman (representing the Halifax Rowing Association), for the purpose of arranging a double-scull match between Hanlan and George Lee on one side and Al. Hamm and P. H. Conley on the other. They were unable to arrive at a satisfactory agreement, however, owing to the fact that the articles brought by Spellman stipulated that the distance should be five miles, while Hanlan was averse to making a match to row farther than four miles. As Spellman had no authority to alter the articles to suit, it was decided that he should lay the matter before the H. R. A. and try to obtain the sanction of that body to the change. Hanlan recognizes the fact that the challenge issued on behalf of him and Lee named the distance as either three or five miles, and should the Haligonians insist upon the longer distance he will likely agree, although the shorter journey would, in view of his engagements and plans for the season, suit him better. Since writing the foregoing a dispatch informs us that the Halifax R. A. have agreed to Hanlan's proposition to row four miles on Aug. 15, the place to be named hereafter.

THE FASTEST OCEAN PASSAGE.—All previous fast passages across the Atlantic between this port and Queenstown, Ireland, have been eclipsed by the crack Guion line steamer Alaska, which arrived here May 6, having made the trip in 6 days 23 hours 46 minutes, thus beating her former best passage, which was the fastest recorded—7d. 1h. 50m., in June of last year. The vessel passed Roche's Point, off Queenstown, at 9h. 30m. A. M. April 29, and arrived at Sandy Hook at 4h. 54m. A. M. May 6, her apparent time being 6d. 19h. 24m., to which must be added 4h. 22m. for difference in longitude, this showing her mean or actual time to be 6d. 23h. 46m. She made on the several successive days 450, 401, 421, 419, 428, 413 and 312 miles. The passengers subscribed and gave to Capt. Murray a sum of money to purchase a Commodore's pennant in honor of the event.

NORTHWESTERN AMATEUR B. A.—The executive board of the Northwestern Amateur Boating Association met at Toledo, O., May 1. The treasurer reported a balance of $853.62 on hand and no debts. The Peninsular Boat Club of Muskegon, Mich., was admitted to membership. The Excelsior Boat Club of St. Louis, Mo., was refused membership, it not being a purely amateur organization. Muskegon was chosen as the place of holding the next regatta, the citizens offering $1,200 for prizes, all local expenses, a grand-stand with seats for 2,000, half of the net receipts, free transportation for boats and crews and hotel accommodations for oarsmen at $1.50 per day. The regatta is to be held July 24, 25. Messrs. Lesher, Sterling and Moran were appointed a regatta committee; Frank H. Wood of Muskegon, commodore; Chas. Lattimore, vice-commodore.

REGATTA IN OHIO.—The Eclipse Boat Club of Canton, O., gave a regatta on Summit Lake, near Canton, May 3. Frank C. Meyer, W. D. Caldwell, Harry Tonner, E. H. Mossgrove, James A. Meyer Jr., and Will G. Hipp entered and started. George F. Friese acted as referee. Caldwell and Mossgrove were distanced in the trial-heats. Frank C. Meyer won the race in 8m. 22s.; James A. Meyer second, Hipp third, Tonner fourth. First prize was $28, second a gold metal, and third a silver medal. The race was witnessed by 400 people, and was a fine exhibition.

FOUR-OARED RACE.—The Solar Tip Rowing Association, composed of employes of the wholesale shoehouse of John Mundell & Sons, held a four-oared race over the mile-and-a-half course on the Schuylkill River, Philadelphia, May 5, resulting as follows: Reds—John Ralston (bow), John Stevens, John Mundell Jr., Walter Keller (stroke), John Hughes (coxswain)—first, in 9m. 51s.; Blues—James Murphy (bow), Hugh Gibson, Robert Ley, James J. Fries (stroke, Harry Walker (cox.)—second.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE of the Schuylkill Navy met in Philadelphia May 7. F. E. Hallowell was elected secretary, in place of Mr. Mederis, resigned, and $350 was appropriated for the use of the regatta committee in connection with the regatta to be held June 25. John F. Hunneker offered a special individual prize for the junior four-oared race, and the commodore was instructed to arrange for the opening review of the navy.

THE SINGLE-SCULL SHELL presented by Morgan & Kennedy to the Washington Light Infantry, to be voted for at their fair, was, as anticipated, carried off by Robert Wade of the Columbias, who fairly swamped his opponents, obtaining 1,297 votes to eight for E. W. McRae, five each for A. B. Crossley and E. S. Maunder, and four each for John R. White and William Roberts.

THE MEMBERS of the Analostan Boat Club of Washington are unaccountably backward in getting on the water this season. The past week afforded fine opportunities for rowing-exercise, but the club was unrepresented on the river. This is not like the Analostans of past years, and, with the excellent material at command, a different story should be told. Let there be no backsliding.

A FINE life-size crayon portrait of President Charles E. Coon was presented to the Columbia Boat Club of Washington, D. C., at the last meeting of that organization. It is a credit to the artist, Harry E. Berthrong, the old-time baseballist, and was a surprise to the gentleman of whom it is a counterfeit presentment.

PETE SNYDER challenges Pat Connolly of the Columbia Boat Club of Pittsburg, Pa., to row three miles, for $150 a side. John Powers of the Lafayette Boat Club, same place, also makes known his desire for a two-mile spin in working-boats with August Kriel of the Southside.

JOHN A. KENNEDY arrived at Portland, Me., on Monday, May 7, quite unexpectedly to the people there, who had not looked for him thus early. It appears that he was impelled to quit Washington sooner than he had intended because he feared that his condition might suffer from a sudden hot spell.

FRED. PLAISTED has been obliged to give up training the Tobacco Boat Club crew of Lynchburg, Va., having been summoned to Chicago as a witness at the trial of Jerry Dunn for the murder of Jimmy Elliott.

THE DETROIT RIVER NAVY held their annual meeting at the Russell House, Detroit, Mich., May 3. The secretary reported no debts and $369.09 cash on hand. S. B. Grummond was elected commodore and Fred. B. Standish vice-commodore.

THE Potomac Boat Club of Washington, D. C., at their last meeting appointed Messrs. Zappone, Johnston and Martin a committee to confer with committees from other clubs in regard to the Potomac regatta.

"TOM COLLINS," maybe not the original of that name, but at all events a good 'un when he grips the sculls, is now a member of the Columbia Boat Club of Washington, for whom he promises to do good battle this season.

ROBERT E. OLDUM is practicing daily at Washington, D. C., for the swimming contest arranged to take place at Ocean View June 1, when he will meet the natators of Norfolk and Portsmouth, Va.

JOSEPH LAING of the Grand Trunk Boat Club of Montreal, P. Q., Canadian amateur champion sculler, will row at Boston, Mass., in June.

O. A. TOLLE of the Olympic Club defeated A. L. Langford of New York in a wherry-race, one mile, for a fifty-dollar medal, at San Francisco, Cal., April 22. He finished two lengths ahead.

WILLIAMS & STEVENS of Lowell, Mass., last week shipped to Halifax, N. S., two single scull shells for Hamm and Conley.

GEORGE LEE took off five pounds of useless weight during the past week.

THE Eastern Yacht Club will hold their annual regatta at Boston, Mass., June 28.

HANLAN, after his race at the Point of Pines May 30, will go to Alexandria Bay, N. Y., there to train for his race with Ross.

THE steam-yacht Mermaid has been sold to S. A. Marsden of the New Haven Yacht Club.

THE keel-schooner Meteor, formerly of this city, is now the property of H. C. Parks of Cambridge, Mass.

THE PEERESS, a schooner-yacht recently sold by F. Hathaway of New Bedford, Mass., to Charles Stevens of Port Royal, S. C., arrived at the latter port a few days ago.

THE Excelsior Boat Club of Fort Madison, Iowa, on the Mississippi River, was organized recently, with H. D. McConn as president and James W. Campbell secretary.

THE TRIGGER.

BOGARDUS' INTENTIONS.

Being questioned recently as to his future intentions, Capt. A. H. Bogardus is reported as saying: "There is no doubt that age is beginning to tell, and it is more than likely that I will retire on June 30, the date to which my proposition regarding the emblems in my possession remains open. The trophy representing the world's championship and the American championship emblem have become my personal property by right of conquest. I am still willing to defend either. Months ago the crack shots of America and Europe were notified that I would waive all rights of possession, and that if anyone would agree to shoot me under the championship conditions, and should win, I would not only surrender the stakes but the emblems also. This proposition still holds good. There is one point that should be placed squarely before the public. I will wager $1,000 to $200 that no man can equal my feat of breaking 5,500 glass balls in 7½s. 29s.; $1,000 to $200 that my score of 100 straight kills at Chicago July 21, 1869, cannot be equaled; and $1,000 to $200 that no one can equal my score in the match at New York July 3, 1880—99 dead birds in 100—under similar conditions."

THE COMING RIFLE MATCH.—Says a cable dispatch on May 5: "Lord Brownlow has been appointed chairman of the committee which has charge of the arrangements for the forthcoming international rifle-match. The other members of the committee are Sir Henry Halford, Col. McDonald of Edinburgh, and Messrs. Walrond, Young, Humphrey, Waller and Scriven. There will be a competition shortly before the Wimbledon meeting, at which will be selected twenty-five candidates for the team, and at the end of the first week at Wimbledon there will be a further selection of eighteen for the team and for reserve members of it."

SHOOTING AT WALNUT HILL.—The weekly competitions at this Massachusetts range resulted as follows on May 5; Creedmoor Practice Match—J. B. Fellows, 45; L. O. Henneson, 45; R. Reed, 45; H. M. Atkins (mil.), 37. Creedmoor Match—R. Abbott, 47; O. M. Jewell, 46; W. Fisher, 46; J. Francis (mil.), 44; F. B. Tibbetts, 43; J. P. Bates, 42; J. Foster, 43 Record Match—O. M. Jewell, 83; J. N. Frye, 77; B. Anson, 76. Rest Match—H. S. Harris, 98; S. Wilder, 94; J. P. Bates, 87.

Brown, 8; re-entry, 8; G. D. Weymss, 8; J. D. Martin, 7; R. H. Waters, 6. Gold-badge Match—J. Buffum, 17; T. C. Fielding, 16; F. T. Noble, 16; J. Hopkins, 15; A. F. Adams, 10; R. H. Waters, 10; J. D. Martin, 8; E. J. Brown, 8.

A RIFLE-COMPETITION, distance forty yards, five shots each, came off May 5, on the occasion of the Polytechnic Institute A. C. games, at Ninth avenue and Ninth street, Brooklyn, L. I. E. L. Blossom led with 42, W. Tomes and W. Cochran tied on 39, and in shooting off the former won with a score of 33. B. Keep scored 36 and S. Russell 35.

IN A CLAY-PIGEON MATCH for a cup, open to members of the Country Club, and shot at Clyde Park, Boston, Mass., May 5, twenty-five birds each, fifteen yards rise, both barrels, Leeds and Williams were the only ones among the entries who had pluck enough to face the bad weather. The former won, scoring twenty-two against seventeen.

BILLIARDS.

THE TOURNAMENT ENDED AND THAT TO COME.

We were close to the mark when, last week, we stated that McLaughlin had scarcely any chance to beat anybody but Cole, that Cole had no chance to beat anybody, and that at the best Carter, spite of his many years' more experience than Wallace has, had but a trifle the better of him in the race for first place. Wallace got there on the night of May 5. Carter—"Well, you know me; I got left by a hair—10 points in 400." More than to anything else, his defeat was due to the excessive "kisses out of count" he got met with on the small table used, and in consequence "our army in Flanders" swore not oftener or more emphatically than he every now and then. It is barely possible that Carter does not now think that cushion-carons are to be "the game of the future." We have never been able to perceive that the game specially suits Carter, although he has played it longer and oftener than any other professional except Schaefer, who was putting in three or four hours a day at it in Flynn & Marron's room, this city as far back as 1876, and who has improved so much at it that in his first public match, early in 1878, he ran 35, and since then he has in public run—just 35 as his best. Carter has not improved at the game, either save in the sense that through playing other games, in which cushion-caroms and direct caroms are judiciously intermixed, he has become a better general player; and so it is with all of them. Wallace in the cushion-carom tournament of 1881 won one more game than Carter, and he has won one more now. Therefore the two stand now as they did then. The general billiards of both has probably improved somewhat since, and hence it is not possible to determine what difference the substitution of a 4½x9 table for a 5x10 has made in lengthening the runs. It certainly has not made a greater difference than twenty-five per cent., and it may not have made more than fifteen. In the tournament of 1881 Wallace's best run was 26, and now it is 35; while Carter's in 1881 was 27, and now it is 38. The averages have been increased from 3.26-58 for Wallace to 5.25-75, and from 4.20-45 for Carter to 5.45-71. The latter was the best average of the preliminary tournament concluded May 5 last, and Carter made it against McLaughlin, in which game, also, he made the best run of the tournament—38. Wallace's average of 5.25-75 was made against Carter, in which game it was that Wallace made his highest run—35. Carter beat McLaughlin by 400 to 299, and Cole by 400 to 242; Wallace beat McLaughlin by 400 to 335, Cole by 400 to 165, and Carter by 400 to 300; and McLaughlin beat Cole by 400 to 241, thus making his only average of record (4.00-85). McLaughlin's best run was 36, made against Wallace. The Philadelphian in this tournament developed a remarkable delicacy of touch, which at another game than cushion-caroms might prove a potent factor. The best run of Cole, who never made a winning average, was 22, made against Carter.

In the matter of facilitating large runs, the 4½x9 table has proved a disappointment to its advocates. The only way, short of dead luck, to make long runs is by nursing in the corners; and, the balls once got there, the caroms can be made as easily on a 5x10 as on a 4½x9 table, the stature of the striker being equal in both cases. In a conversation with Jacob Schaefer last December, when the question came up as to the difference between the playing in the cushion-carom tournament then in progress at his room and that at Marshall's room, Boston, he thought that the playing in his tourney, as it was on a 5x10 table, was greatly superior to that in Boston, which was on a 4½x9. We ventured to express the opinion that the difference between the two tables, for cushion-caroms, when first class men are the players, was not more than twenty per cent. Schaefer thought it ought to be much more, as it probably is at straight billiards. It remains to be proved that at cushion-caroms it is as much as twenty per cent. Schaefer himself, who has long been disgusted with cushion-caroms, is now reported as sick of the 4½x9 table. He had in practice up to the 2d inst. made but one respectable run, and that was the 103 we last week spoke of; but that was the result of a defective table, the balls getting anchored in ruts, so that the bank-shot nurse was a comparatively easy matter. Up to the 2d inst. Vignaux had made no better run than 65. In fact, he had not practiced, as we were on that date informed by Daniel Strauss, since the week during which he returned from Chicago, the best he had done on the table set up for him in his hotel having been to occasionally knock the balls around for an hour to keep his arm from stiffening. With Schaefer and Vignaux both having no relish for the game, with Vignaux reckless as to the table and Schaefer disgusted with it, there is no wisdom in attempting to predict the winner of the tournament that is to begin in Tammany Hall on May 14. We are not at all surprised that in Chicago, from which place we are advised on May 8, they are betting 100 to 80 that the winner cannot be named. Even Sexton had been unable to work out more than 65 points in a run up to our last information from his quarter, and there is no one sorer over the table than he. Sexton thinks that Vignaux and Schaefer ought to get first and second prizes between them, and thinks that he will be able to make a hard fight with Daly and Dion for the other three prizes. Better than third he himself does not look for. Daly has been lifting up his voice all along against the table, and the only player who is now quiet as to it is Dion, who has recently entered into arrangements that prevent any serious objection from him. There will be rare music before the tourney is over. With the five leading contestants either opposed to the game or opposed to the table, some of them may be expected to play exhibition billiards when desperate efforts can no longer secure them the place to which they think their talents entitle them. The cushion-carom tournament of 1881 was wild enough, even with but one of the contestants objecting to the game. This tourney ought to be much wilder; and the only thing that will keep it within the bounds of reason is for Schaefer and Vignaux to be lucky at the start and win their first few games. According to the prospectus that appears in our business columns, the management give three thousand dollars in prizes, and this sum, it is probable, will be apportioned in the five sums $1,200, $800, $500, $350 and $150 as heretofore when the House of H. W. Collender has directed affairs of this kind. No endeavor

ATHLETIC.

ATLANTIC ATHLETIC CLUB.

The youthful members of this club were not favored with pleasant weather on the occasion of their annual Spring games, held at the Manhattan A. C. Grounds on Saturday, May 5, the afternoon being sunless and a brisk, chilly wind blowing across the grounds from northeast, which caused some of the partly-nude schoolboys among the competitors to shiver while waiting for their turn. This, doubtless, was the cause of the extremely small attendance of spectators, about a half hundred being present. Save that too much license was given to contestants before and after participation, as well as to those who took no part in the games, in the matter of invading the inner ring, which should always be reserved exclusively for officials and working members of the press, the management was good, the several events being worked off with promptness and dispatch. At future meetings, however, the club should insist upon every competitor wearing on his breast a number corresponding with that given him on the programme, so that they may be distinguished by those to whom they are personally unknown. On Saturday last very many of the contestants did not display any number, while in several instances the figures shown were totally different from those appearing opposite the names of the wearers on the printed card of events. These omissions and stupid blunders created confusion, and were the cause of a great deal of dissatisfaction, which would have been more loudly expressed had the number of sightseers been larger. It is an error of management that admits of easy remedy, and, as it is never too soon to learn, the Atlantics will be expected to do better hereafter. There were many ambitious and promising youngsters among the participating athletes and the events were quite interesting, while the performances were creditable. A return follows:

One-hundred-yards run, open, first and second to run in final heat—First heat: C. E. Proctor, Crescent A. C., scratch, first, in 11s.; R. G. Sullivant, N. Y. City, 12yds., second, by two feet; C. Woolley, Crescent A. C., 5, third. Second heat: W. Halpin, American A. C., 2, first, in 10⅘s.; C. S. Busse, N. Y. City, 8, second. Third heat: F. S. Roumage, Columbia A. C., 6, walked over. Final heat: Busse first, in 10⅘s.; Halpin second, by a yard; Roumage, 0; Proctor, 0; Sullivant, 0.

One-mile bicycle-race, open—L. Stearns, N. Y. City, 20yds., first, in 3m. 38s.; E. A. Thomson, Manhattan A. C., owed 40yds., second; F. M. Harris, Ixion Bi. C., 40, third; R. G. Rood, Ixion Bi. C., scratch, fourth; C. A. Reed, New York A. C., scratch, fifth. H. Y. Smith, N. Y. City, 20, had a fall and a severe shake-up while rounding the lower turn on the third lap and stopped. The scratch-man tried hard to get up, but the handicap was too great for him to overcome.

One-hundred-yards run, open to boys under fifteen years, first and second allowed in second trials—First heat: I. Simon, N. Y. City, 3yds., first, in 12s.; P. H. Flanagan, Gramercy A. C., scratch, second, by two feet; O. Kohn, N. Y. City, 11, third. Second heat: F. G. Roumage, N. Y. City, 7, first, in 11⅘s.; A. G. Reynolds, 2, second; J. M. Farr Jr., N. Y. City, scratch, third; A. J. Rice, N. Y. City, 12, fourth. Third heat: R. W. Townsend, Atlantic A. C., 3, first, in 12s.; W. Coster, Crescent A. C., 3, second, by a yard. Fourth heat: M. A. Bishop, N. Y. City, 7, first, in 12s.; A. C. Pickhardt, N. Y. City, 9, second, by a foot; C. Levy, N. Y. City, 0. Fifth heat: C. D. Bernheimer, Atlantic A. C., 9, and A. S. Guckenheimer, N. Y. City, 10, walked over. Sixth heat; E. Lentilhon, N. Y. City, 10, and J. Rice, N. Y. City, 12, walked over. Second round—First heat; Coster first, in 12s.; Roumage second, by a yard; Reynolds, 0; Townsend, 0; Simon, 0; Flanagan, 0. Second heat: Pickhardt first, in 12⅗s.; Bishop, 0; Bernheimer, 0; Lentilhon, 0; Guckenheimer, 0; Rice, 0. Final heat: Roumage first, in 12⅘s.; Coster second, by a yard; Bishop third, Lentilhon fourth. Roumage jumped to the front in a few strides, and, although Coster made a grand effort to get up, he remained there till the tape was carried away. Bishop, a game little runner, was close up.

One-hundred-yards run, club—D. H. Babcock, scratch, first, in 11s.; R. W. Townsend, 7yds., second; C. D. Morrison, scratch, third.

Half-mile walk, club—G. H. Davison, scratch, first, in 3m. 49s.; W. J. Seidenberg, 20s., second, by three yards.

One-mile run—Thomas J. Murphy, Manhattan A. C., scratch, first, in 4m. 48s.; E. A. Thomson, Manhattan A. C., owed 12yds., second, by several yards; E. A. Richard, Crescent A. C., 40yds., third, by a yard; S. H. Lent, N. Y. City, 60; S. B. Toplitz, C. C. N. Y., 100; and P. M. Gamble, N. Y. City, 100, did not complete the distance. The start given Richard, backed up by speed and pluck, enabled him to maintain the lead until after losing one of his shoes, at the close of the seventh lap, when he was closed on and passed by Murphy, who retained control until the finish, Thomson taking second place on the homestretch. Richard deserves credit for the manly struggle he made to the end.

One-mile run, club—W. J. Seidenberg, 40 yards, first, in 5m. 49s.; C. B. Davison, scratch, second; L. J. Reckendorfer, 40yds., 0; C. D. Bernheimer, 100, 0. The scratch-man managed to make up thirty yards of the handicap before the winner reached the tape.

One furlong run, club—C. W. Culver, 1 yard, first, in 26⅘s.; D. H. Babcock, scratch, second, by two inches; C. W. Alliger, 1, third.

Tug of war, four men, 510lb, 5-minute limit—Columbia Grammar School: F. M. Gamble, C. D. Morrison, F. S. Roumage and A. D. Forrest first, by over four feet; Atlantic A. C.: G. H. Davison, C. Culver, D. Babcock and C. H. Alliger second. The Columbians obtained almost a foot at pistol-fire, no part of which they afterwards lost.

WILLIAM STEELE, Pedestrian,

whose portrait appears on our first page, was born at Birnie Know, Ayrshire, Scotland, in 1857, stands 5ft. 7¼in. in height and weighs in condition 130lb. At an early age he showed that he was possessed of both speed and good staying powers, and commenced his pedestrian career by competing at professional athletic games in Scotland, but still followed his occupation as a miner. We will give some of his principal performances: In August, 1878, he won a two-mile handicap from scratch at Kilbirnie, beating G. D. Noremac, to whom he gave 80yds. start; W. Park of Glasgow, 220yds.; and several others. Beat James Findlay of Hurliford in a two-mile match for $125 a side at Mauchline, in February, 1879. He sailed for America two months afterwards, and his first match here was with James Nicol of McIntyre, Pa., a mile and a half, for $200 a side, at Canton, Pa., in August, 1881, which he won easily. Beat Robert Carmichael of McIntyre five miles, for $200 a side, same place, in March, 1882. Carmichael not being satisfied, they were again matched to run three miles for $200 a side in June following, same place, and for the second time Carmichael suffered defeat. Steele next appeared in Boston, Mass., in July, 1882, in a ten-mile race, which he won, beating eleven others, in 54m. 25s. In the same month he returned to Scotland and followed the athletic games for two months, being very successful. In September, at the Shawfield Recreation Grounds, Glasgow, he won a mile handicap, having 150yds. start, and his time being 4m. 13s. There were thirty-three starters. Returning to America in October, his next performance was at Blossburg, Pa., on Christmas-day, when he ran ten miles against five local pedestrians, winning. He beat John Younkman of Massillon, five miles, for $500 a side, at Canton, in January last. Not long afterwards he issued a challenge in THE CLIPPER to all ten-mile runners, which was accepted by T. C. Herbert, ex-champion of England, three races, at five, ten and fifteen miles, each for $300, being arranged. The five-mile event was decided March 3 at Blossburg, Herbert winning in 27m. 2s., by a few feet only. The ten-mile race came off at Ashland, Pa., March 17, and this time Steele finished first by fifty yards, in the rather slow time of 55m. 43s. The fifteen-mile contest was decided at Canton, Pa., March 31. Herbert finished the first five miles ahead, in 27m., but on the seventh mile Steele got in front, and, though headed afterwards, he regained the lead, and opened a gap of one hundred yards. Herbert gave up on the eleventh mile, and Steele was allowed to stop before completing the full distance. He then issued another challenge to all—George Hazael preferred—to run ten miles for the championship and $250 to $500 a side. This was promptly accepted by Charley Price and a match made for $250 a side, which will be decided May 19 at the Manhattan A. C. Grounds, this city. Steele's last appearance in public was in a twenty-five-mile run at the Columbus, O., Fair Grounds, April 28, which was contested in a heavy rain and on a muddy track, Steele easily winning in 3h. 23m. 55s.

SORRY MYERS WON'T GO.

The disappointment felt generally by patrons of athletics on the Pacific Coast because L. E. Myers has decided not to pay a visit to that section this year finds expression in the columns of The Pacific Life as follows: "We regret to learn that Myers has irrevocably determined not to come to California as hoped and expected, although if our information be correct liberal inducements were held out to him to come. We have numerous candidates for fame on the cinder-path, and to test their pretensions it would have been a source of much gratification to the public here to have seen a contest between Myers and Haley or Masterson, or both. Perhaps we are wrong in saying so, as Myers is the best judge of his own affairs, but we think he has erred in not coming to San Francisco. No man would have received a more regal reception, for it would have been the pleasure and duty of all parties to make his visit pleasant and profitable. He has decided, however, to the contrary, and so we must bear the disappointment, most keenly felt, as best we can."

HORSE BEATS BICYCLE.—On April 14 John Keen, the English champion at one mile, undertook to beat George Ainsley's Lady, a trotter going to harness, five miles, for $250 a side, at the Abbey Hey Grounds, near Manchester, Eng. When half a mile had been covered, Lady, who stands 15h. 1in. high, went to the front, and at the finish of the first mile she was leading by at least 130yds. Further comments on the race are unnecessary, as Keen gradually dropped further in the rear. At the end of two miles the horse led by 400 yards, and on the conclusion of three miles Raymer and his charge was leading by fully 600 yards. Shortly afterwards Raymer began to take matters easily, and after one or two easies the horse passed the post an easy winner by one lap, less about twenty yards. Time, 17m. 7s.

PHILADELPHIA FENCING AND SPARRING CLUB GAMES.

There was a goodly crowd at Stenton, Philadelphia, on Saturday afternoon, May 5, when was held the inaugural field athletic meeting of this club. The weather was threatening, but fortunately the rain held off until the events were decided. The grounds had been well prepared for the meeting and the track was in good order. The management was in capable hands, although there was rather a multiplicity of officials. Results are given below, the noteworthy event of the day being the eclipsing of F. Larkin's former best-on-record standing long-jump by M. W. Ford, the rising Brooklyn sprinter and leaper:

One-hundred-yards run, first and second to run in final heat—First heat: A. G. Fell, Princeton College, first, in 10⅗s.; S. Derickson, Columbia College, second; Wm. Wunder, Olympic A. C., third. Second heat: B. W. McIntosh, Princeton College, first, in 10⅘s.; M. W. Ford, Brooklyn, second; N. Ellison, University of Pennsylvania, third; L. R. Wister, University of Pennsylvania, fourth. Final heat: McIntosh first, in 10¼s.; Derickson second, Fell third, Ford fourth.

Fencing—M. H. Hutchinson first, 7 points; C. W. Bailey second, 3 points. Little skill was shown during this competition, but there was an abundance of roughing.

One-hundred-yards run, club—J. F. McFadden first, in 10⅘s.; P. C. Maderia second, R. R. Osborne third.

Tug-of-war, 10m. limit—First pull: Princeton College—H. P. Toller, G. H. Carpenter, C. W. Baird, F. H. Miller first—by fifteen inches; Philadelphia F. and S. C.—D. L. Hutchinson, M. Hutchinson, E. Toland, W. Huber—second. Second pull: Princeton first, by three inches; Lafayette College—W. C. Bonj, S. C. Bond, J. A. Bell, H. C. Reader—second.

Quarter-mile run—F. L. Coolidge, Princeton College, first, in 56s. Robert Faries, Philadelphia F. and S. Club, second, by ten yards, having led throughout.

Running high-jump—O. Harriman Jr. and J. B. Harriman, both of Princeton College, tied at 5ft. 5in., and tossed for the first medal, the former winning; M. W. Ford, Brooklyn, 5ft. 4¾in.; W. B. Page, Rugby College, 5ft. 4½in.

One-furlong run—S. Derickson Jr., Columbia College, first, in 23s.; B. W. McIntosh, Princeton College, a close second; L. R. Wister, Univ. of Pa., third.

Quarter-mile handicap-run, club—S. Welsh, 12yds. start, first, in 56⅘s.; P. C. Maderia, scratch, second, by four yards.

Running long-jump—M. W. Ford, Brooklyn, first, 20ft.; S. L. Shober, University of Pa., second, 19ft. 7½in.; O. P. Smith, Phila. F. and S. C., third, 19ft. 6in.; A. G. Fell, Princeton College, 18ft. 8in.; J. B. Hench, Lafayette College, 18ft. 3in.

Singlestick—F. A. Packard, P. F. and S. C., beat W. De F. Baker, P. F. and S. C.

Hurdle-race, 12yds.—B. W. McIntosh, Princeton College, first, in 19⅘s.; O. Harriman, Princeton, second; L. R. Wister, Univ. of Pa., third. M. W. Ford, Brooklyn, quit at fourth hurdle.

Half-mile run—F. L. Coolidge, Princeton College, first, in 2m. 12⅘s.; Robert Faries, Phila. F. and S. C., second, by ten yards. Faries led until the homestretch was reached, when Coolidge made an effort that carried him past with a rush, and, coming away at every stride, he won easily. The result was a great surprise to the friends of the loser, who were confident that he would be first to touch the tape.

Two-mile bicycle-race—J. Dyson, Frankford Bicycle Club, and Louis Kolb, Rugby Academy, were the only starters, and a dispute about the lap-scoring led to the judges reserving their decision as to the claim each contestant made to the victory.

Standing long-jump—M. W. Ford, Brooklyn, first, 10ft. 5in.; J. F. McFadden, Phila. F. and S. C., second, 9ft. 9in.; W. Wunder, Olympic A. C., third, 9ft. 5in.; E. N. Black, 9ft. 3in. Ford's jump is now the best by any amateur on record in this country, the previous best having been that of F. Larkin of Princeton College, 10ft. 3⅝in.

One-mile handicap-run—P. C. Maderia, Phila. F. and S. C., 60yds. start, first, in 5m. 42½s.; Robert Faries, Phila. F. and S. C., scratch, second. The winner was always in front and won in a jog.

Officials: Referee, Wm. B. Curtis; judges—Dr. J. M. Taylor, C. B. Lane, L. C. Maderia Jr. and R. K. Prentice; timekeepers—W. B. Curtis, D. B. Birney, Dr. A. G. Ladd and D. Kennedy; starter, Bertram Hughes; measurers—H. C. Adams, John H. Shober and Clemens Jones.

HORSES vs. BICYCLES.

The six days' race at the Casino, Boston, between horses and bicycles came to a close Saturday night, May 5, and resulted in a victory for the horses, who, it was stated, scored 921 miles to 899 for the bicycle-riders. The horse-track was not measured properly, however, so that the number of miles accorded Leroy is incorrect. The bicycle-record is correct. J. S. Prince made a very poor record during the week, but at times rode in his old form. He was chafed badly, and in the last few days did little work. W. M. Woodside worked grandly, averaging 16 1-6 miles each hour of the thirty hours he was on the track. His best day's work was on Friday, when he covered 87 miles 2 laps. On Saturday he covered 85 miles, while Prince covered 48. The total for Woodside was 485 miles; Prince, 414; total, 899. Le Roy rode in a very graceful manner, and had a fine stud of fresh, fleet and strong horses. He met with a few minor accidents during the week, and was thrown several times. Le Roy's history is an eventful and interesting one. He was born in Bristol, R. I. In 1869 he was army postal-messenger between Forts Ridgely and Wadsworth, Washington Territory, and carried the mails between these places through the Indian country and the Yellowstone region, a distance of nearly 200 miles, and also between Forts Wadsworth and Abercrombie, a distance of 60 miles. He accompanied Gen. Custer in the Black Hills campaign, and was carrying a message from Custer to Reno when the troops were surrounded and massacred by the Sioux and Warm Spring Indians in the Little Rosebud battle. Several years later he accompanied the Government party to the scene of the massacre and assisted in the recovery of Custer's body. Since that time he has given exhibitions of endurance-riding, among which are the following: In 1874, at Rochester, N. Y., 300 miles in 14h. 13m.; 1876, at Bay District Park, San Francisco, Cal., 1,236 miles in six days, beating Smith and Leon nine miles; 1878, at St. Louis, 100 miles in 4h. 58m.; October, 1878, at Minneapolis, Minn., 20 miles in 43m. 2s., using five horses and changing every mile; at Newport, R. I., 11 miles in 28m., changing every half mile. Both Prince and Le Roy declare that they will never enter a six-day contest again, and it is to be hoped that as far as the interests of the sport are concerned they will keep their word.

CHAMPIONSHIP BICYCLING.

The match for the professional championship at twenty miles was on April 14 contended for by the following bicyclists at Leicester, Eng.: R. Howell, R. James, F. Lees, C. R. Garrard, H. O. Duncan, S. Vale and P. Kaye. The track measures exactly four laps to the mile, and was in capital condition. James went off with the lead at a slow pace, followed by Garrard, Lees, Howell and Duncan in the order named, with Kaye and Vale immediately in the rear. In the tenth lap Howell put on a tremendous spurt, and he quickly drew away from his opponents. Lees and Garrard, however, went in hot pursuit. Reaching the third mile (10m. 10s.), the champion was fifteen yards in front of Lees and Garrard. Howell at four miles was sixty yards in front of Lees, with Garrard fourth, fifty yards in the rear. Completing his fifth mile in 16m. 10s., Howell overlapped Duncan, Kaye and Vale, Lees at this stage being half a lap to the bad. A mile later Howell placed a circuit between himself and all his opponents with the exception of Lees. Half a mile later Howell overlapped the field, and then took a breather. The race from this stage permits of but little description, as the holder of the trophy maintained the advantage he had gained, and ultimately passed the winning-post only four yards short of a lap to the good. A splendid race was, however, witnessed for second position, Garrard and Lees entering the last lap together. Half a lap from home the Sheffielder drew to the front, and, getting the inside position for the finish, he secured the second prize by a yard. The winning time was 1h. 5m. ⅕s.

ENGLISH AMATEUR ASSOCIATION.

At a recent meeting of the Amateur Athletic Association in London, Eng., several matters relating to clubs who had recently held meetings in a loose sort of manner were brought up, and all who competed at Cardiff at Easter, where the value or check-system was adopted, were suspended till May 30. Thereupon Bell's Life takes occasion to comment thus:

Whether the decree can be enforced or not seems rather a matter of opinion. Our American athletes—a clear-headed body, by the way—appear to think not. Amateurs may insist on running where they please, and no by-laws of the Association can make them anything but amateurs. The most the Association can do is to prohibit their running at certain meetings under the A. A. A.'s special control. The Association, for instance, might place its veto against the offender running at a London Athletic Club meeting, but not at the championship. Should they bar anyone who answers the definition from competing at the forthcoming championship meeting, it would cease to be a championship. For these reasons we are compelled to admit that there is a probability of the rule being short-lived, although we applaud the pluck of the A. A. A. in trying it on.

A HANDSOME PRIZE.—The prize cup, value twenty-five dollars, presented to the Yale Athletic Association, and constituting the prize for the quarter-mile run at the Spring meeting, has been manufactured by the Gorham Company, and is a quart mug of copper, gold lined, with bone handle tipped with silver. The name of the fortunate winner is to be let into the bone handle in black enamel. The conditions of winning this prize are that the winner must not only beat all his rivals in the race, but also break the best Yale record for the quarter-mile, which is 53⅕s., the best college record being 50⅕s. It is a special prize, that has to be won but once to become the property of the winner, while The Record prize must be won three times before it can be finally held.

HENRY LIMPERICH and Albert Billick of Downieville, Cal., on April 15 ran ten miles, for $250 a side. Each ran separately, on a track 354 feet 7 inches around, Limperich first running and covering the distance in 1h. 11m. 15s. Billick on his second mile struck his foot against a post and fell, jarring himself so much as to make him dizzy, but he continued running until he had covered nearly eight miles and a half, in 1h. 3m. 45s., when he fell on the ropes in a fainting condition. He was removed from the track and Limperich declared the winner.

CHARLEY HARRIMAN has embarked in the saloon business at Truckee, Cal.

JOSEPH MASTERSON, the Pacific-coast sprinter, has joined the Olympic Club of 'Frisco.

POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE.

The fifth annual Spring meeting of the Polytechnic Institute Athletic Club was held on Saturday afternoon, May 5, on the grounds of the Brooklyn Athletic Club, at Ninth avenue and Ninth street. The weather was unfavorable for outdoor sports, and there was in consequence but a small turnout of spectators. The programme was quite lengthy, but the events were run off in good time. Medals were given to winners only. The track was far from fast. A return follows:

FOX vs. TRACY.—The match between Con. Fox and Ed. Tracy to walk one hundred miles, for a stated $250 and gate-receipts, commenced at 9.15 P. M. April 27 at the Bellevue House, Cincinnati, O., a large crowd being present and the prospect of an interesting contest favorable. It came to an unexpected conclusion about 11 A. M. 28, however, owing to the illness of Tracy, who had been falling off for several hours—a result, it is thought, of not being in "fix."

THE NEXT indoor athletic meeting of the Williamsburg Athletic Club will be held on Monday evening, May 21, when they intend the entertainment given shall surpass their previous efforts in this line. Money being needed to carry out contemplated improvements at the grounds of the club, a small admission-fee will on this occasion be charged—a fact which ought not to have the effect of lessening the attendance.

MARTIN DEMPSEY easily worsted Gus Hill in a contest at collar-and-elbow wrestling at Gray's Opera-house, Williamsburg, L. I., May 2. They were advertised to contend for a purse of one hundred and fifty dollars. Dempsey won the first and third falls in short order, losing the second in two minutes from the time of taking hold, seemingly because his foot slipped. Gus is no match for Martin at this sort of business, but he can swing clubs all round him.

MISS LILLIE DINSMORE of Canada will ride a 20-mile race against a bicyclist, for $100 and a gold medal, at the Casino, Boston, May 11. The young lady is said to be only 17 years old and an expert equestrienne, having been accustomed to the equine species from her childhood. Wilmot and Alden will also give a fancy and trick bicycling exhibition.

HYDE'S 135yds. foot-handicap was decided at Charter Oak Park, Hartford, Ct., April 30. Several hundred persons were present, and some excellent sport was witnessed. The result of the final heat was as follows: E. Cogan, 8yds., first, $90; J. Leach, 11½, second, by two yards, $20; G. C. Baldy, 14, third, by six inches, $10; W. Carney, 18, fourth, by a foot, $5.

M. J. LOWNDES, the fifty-miles amateur champion tricyclist, declines to credit the statement made by A. Nixon that the latter had beaten Lowndes' time for said distance on the road, and proposes to put Nixon's powers to the test in a match of any distance up to one hundred miles for a cup or other prize to suit.

THE OLYMPIC CLUB of San Francisco, Cal., intend holding an amateur boxing tournament for the championship, at which medals will be offered for light, middle and heavy weights, the same to be held two years before becoming personal property.

KERNAN'S SUMMER GARDEN, Baltimore, Md., will open for the season May 28 with a six days' pedestrian tournament. This will be followed by local and female walks and other athletic attractions. Pavilion and outdoor amusements are wanted. See advertisement.

THE Executive Committee of the United States Lawn-tennis Association held a meeting in this city May 2, and decided that in future the Ayers ball should be used. The annual tournament will this year be held at Newport, R. I., in August.

JOHN K. BROOKER, 312lb, and Joseph Franklin, 326lb of Camden, N. J., are matched to run half a mile for a dinner for themselves and friends, to be paid for by the man who loses.

THE TRIGGER.

CARVER vs. GRAHAM.

The well-known English pigeon-shot W. Graham has issued a challenge "to anyone in the world to shoot with him a pigeon-match of 100 birds for $1,000 a side," and announces that his preferences are for a contest with Dr. Carver, Captain Bogardus, Mr. Mitchell or other American experts. He also announces that he will, "with one hand, at twenty-six yards rise, wager $1,000 that he can beat the best shot in the world, shooting against him at thirty-two yards rise." To this Dr. Carver, who, since he has clearly demonstrated his superiority over the ex-champion Captain Bogardus, is admitted to be our foremost trap-shot, replies that he will be pleased to shoot Graham a match in this country for from $1,000 to $5,000 a side. If Graham will make the match for $5,000 a side, Carver will allow him $500 for expenses, and will shoot immediately after his arrival, or as soon thereafter as shall be convenient to Graham. If Graham will not come to America, Carver will go to England in December next and shoot for $5,000 a side, or as much more as Graham may desire.

Black announced mate in eleven moves.

(a) Not good; correct had been Q B to B 4.
(b) Bad again. About right was Q to K B sq. Black now gets decidedly the best of the game, and steadily gains ground.
(c) Time lost; again Q to B sq was correct.
 To anyone who will solve this very pretty ending in less than eleven The Chronicle offers a prize.

Most Brilliant Game.

The Observer has awarded the Charlick prize for the most brilliant game in the Adelaide C. C.'s recent tournament to the following game between E. S. Peart, to whom the brilliant and rising young master A. Tyley was handicapped to give K B P and three moves. "It is a rarity to see brilliancy combined with soundness and brevity."

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ QUESTIONS THAT DO NOT REACH THIS OFFICE UNTIL TUESDAY MORNING WILL NOT BE ANSWERED UNTIL THE FOLLOWING WEEK.

AMATEUR ATHLETE.—1. All your questions but one involve but a mere matter of opinion, and we prefer not to express ours. You had better consult with some manager or with someone else connected with the business, letting him see what you can do. 2. At the time that party last communicated with us on the subject he was using four kinds of club on the stage, the lightest being eight pounds and the heaviest sixty-eight.
A. M. C., St. Louis.—We have no record of the death of a Joseph Whittle, or Willte, supposed to have been killed ten or twelve years ago in a den of lions, of which he was the trainer. A Joseph Willett died in Milwaukee in 1864; but he was a sideshowman, and his death was caused by consumption.
J. E. B.—We have never heard that E. P. Christy ever came to this country. Let us know what you know about it, and we shall make inquiries.
A. C. W., Brooklyn.—It is possibly not worth inquiring about with regard to that particular circus, as elephants have "walked the tight rope" elsewhere, if not in Brooklyn.
ALF., Stillwater.—It is against our rules to have persons who are in any way connected with the profession in such a capacity.
C. N. E.—Of Aaron Appleton, secretary, Theatre Comique Building, this city. He will furnish particulars.
A. R., Richmond.—Miss Mary Anderson is a Californian by birth.
E. H. W., St. Louis.—Adelaide Neilson died in Paris, France.

CORRECT DATA, Brooklyn.—1. The building transformed finally into the present Theatre Comique was first used as a theatre on Dec. 23, 1865, the play being "The School for Scandal." 2. The Olympic Theatre, Broadway, near Houston street, was finally closed April 17, 1869, the play being "Richard III."
G. M., Port Jervis.—1. We have not seen him perform in a long time, to our recollection; but we should say that he turns backward. 2. There has never been any recognized champion vaulter. Anyone who can vault extremely well styles himself the champion. 3. There has been but one Dan Rice in the circus business in America.
J. H. F., Port Jervis.—1. As James Robinson began as a boy, we presume that he has ridden in both ways. 2. There has never been any recognized champion rider of either sex. 3. It is but three weeks since we published a portrait of Dan Rice the clown, and he was not dead then.
R. T., Leavenworth.—The objection to answering questions of this nature is that we should be burthened with them. Therefore we make mention of such matters in our amusement-news pages only at about the time they are to occur.
E. S. J., Hamilton.—1. There is but one Zazel here so far as we know. 2, 3. We do not know. You might address Sallie Marks or Jacob Showles in care of THE CLIPPER Post-office.
A. C., New Orleans.—"The Devil's Auction" is a play in which dancing figures prominently. There is a combination traveling and performing it.
DR. W. E. BATES, resident physician of the City and County Hospital, San Francisco, wishes the address of Capt. M. V. Bates, giant.
F. C. W.—Booth, Barrett, Bangs and Davenport were not in the revival of "Julius Cæsar" at Booth's Theatre in 1874-5. The last three were.
A. B. H.—If the hall is licensed, the company needs none, usually.
SUBSCRIBER, Brockport.—A loser. Lotta is not "over fifty years old."
LEO.—We have not heard of the death of Thomas Warfield as yet. If we should hear of it, announcement will be made under the heading of "Deaths in the Profession."
T. F.—1. The late James Fisk Jr. was born at Pownall, Vt. 2. He was buried in Brattleboro, Vt. 3. His mother was not then living. His father was living until a short time ago, and may be yet.
J. F. D., Toledo.—It was the Parepa-Rosa Opera Troupe that inaugurated the Wheeler Opera-house, your city, on Dec. 15, 1871. The opera was "The Bohemian Girl."
OLD SUBSCRIBER, Pittsburg.—The Cosmopolitan Theatre was opened by J. K. Emmet's Company.
PITTSBURG.—Perhaps Ed. James, whose card see in our advertising columns, can get those recitations for you.
G. P. McD., Brooklyn.—The Broadway Theatre, Broadway, near Broome street, was closed April 28, 1869.
W. A. A., Washington.—Miss Jeffreys Lewis and Miss Catherine Lewis are sisters.
W. G. R., Brooklyn.—Address Joseph P. Winter in care of THE CLIPPER Post-office. In this column we do not furnish whereabouts.
C. S., St. Louis.—See reply to "R. T., Leavenworth," as well as that to "W. G. R., Brooklyn."
J. C., Indianapolis.—Jennie Baron, who died in Baltimore, Md., last year, was the wife of Will A. Baron.
H. C. E., Scranton.—The Philadelphia Lodge of Elks was organized March 12, 1871.
G. H. E., Newport.—1. Lotta was born in this city. 2. The ages of professionals we decline, as a rule, to publish.
A. P.—You will find him mentioned in the amusement pages of THE CLIPPER, if you will read them attentively.
D. G. L., Troy.—It is not probable that Lotta will reappear upon the stage, at least professionally, after the close of this season.
M. J. D., Chicago.—Miss Carrie Daniels was at one time a church singer and a public reader.

INTRODUCTORY.

TUESDAY, May 8.

The event of the week just past was the Dramatic Festival. Cincinnati is proud of it. The assemblages could not hear much, but they could see one another, and that sufficed. It was not a gorgeous financial success; but, according to the best data obtainable now, it did a trifle better than pay expenses. Cincinnati prefers these chunks of dramatic pabulum to the choicest musical morsels that could possibly be set before it, and it is proposed to repeat the Dramatic Festival yearly. The tradesmen of the Queen City think well of this proposition. This is especially true of those unambitious merchants who do a retail business, and to whom the Festival has been a blessing in disguise. "It is an ill wind that blows nobody good;" but it is a queer wind indeed that will blow both ways at spouse. Perhaps Mrs. Von B. has a new husband in her eye, like one of the wives of Johann Strauss. Johann recently got divorced from her through his turning Protestant for that purpose, and there was a race between the disunited couple to see which should again marry the director of the theatre in which she had been a performer..... We read in our exchanges that a girl in Pennsylvania recently walked sixty-eight miles to see a circus. Last year the subject of this pedestrian jaunt in quest of the circus was a married woman in Minnesota, who walked seventy-two miles and carried her family (twins) on both arms. The year before that, it was an old woman in Michigan, who had to walk a mile for every year of her age to get to that circus; and she was ninety-one years old, if she was a day.....One of the many inquisitive correspondents who have come upon earth to make us miserable wishes to be told if he can learn to dance by merely reading some one of the various books on the art of dancing. Of course, he cannot. All the reading in the world will do him no good, unless he moves his feet a little at the same time. .....The profession is branching out, and by-and-bye it may be expected to take in the whole earth. As our meaning may not be exactly clear, we shall give a little anecdote, as related by a doorkeeper. The other night he was accosted with: "Do you pass the profession?" "Certainly. What are you connected with, and where are you playing now?" "I am a bellringer." "With what party?" "The Episcopal Church party, around the corner. I ring 'em in on Sunday mornings." The doorkeeper was too much of a gentleman to show his disgust. He let this "professional" pass in..... A laughable case of overacting, described in our Dramatic Summary this week, occurred in the Brooklyn Theatre the other night. The victim was M. A. Kennedy, who is a good actor—when he does not lose his balance in trying to be too realistic. In attempting to depict "a moment of surprise," he struck an attitude that would have been natural in a man hit by lightning, and then he fell flat upon his back, without intending to do it—just as the man struck by lightning would have done.....We were assured of Mrs. Langtry last week that "She Stoops to Conquer." Therefore we went to the Fifth-avenue Theatre to see her do it. It was a hoax. She was as haughty as before—a veritable Hard Castle—and conquered not a solitary spectator. The lady has made no appreciable improvement as an actress since she has been away from this city, and consequently she is less beautiful than she was. The spectators imagine even that her ankles have grown larger than they were, although really there has been no necessity for such a growth. Although not in the bills, yet she also appeared at the benefit of Miss Kate Pattison. She was in a private box, but it was easier to hear her than some of the performers on the stage. Miss Kate Hodson was one of Mrs. Langtry's companions. Not being engaged in the play, Miss Hodson refrained from acting in the box; but then it must be remembered that, being an actress of many years' experience, Miss Hodson does not need practice and rehearsal everywhere..... Talking about the friends of the Prince of Wales, Miss Kate Vaughan had a benefit at the Gaiety Theatre, London, Eng., on the 3d inst. The Prince was there. So were other notable masculines. Some of them paid forty guineas for a private box, guineas! Lucky Vaughan!

CITY SUMMARY.

CHARLES G. PRATT the pianist is now the happiest of men. He has recently concluded a very pleasant tour with Nilsson, and on Sunday morning, May 6, his wife presented him with a son. Mr. P.'s next composition should be a fantasia on "Come innocente giovane" (Ah! gentle boy) from "Anna Bolena."

THE FAREWELL performance of "The Professor" in this city is to be given in Haverly's Theatre May 12. The traveling tour is to end 31 in Bridgeport, Ct., after which it is promised that this piece shall be heard no more in the land. The attendance at Haverly's Monday night last was small.

"A BUNCH OF KEYS" continues to draw largely at the San Francisco Minstrels' Opera-house, and on Friday night, May 11, its fiftieth consecutive representation there is to be given, when every lady present is to receive a satin souvenir. Willie Edouin and Alice Atherton are going to England shortly to perform there next season.

KATE PATTISON AND EMILY FAITHFULL are to sail for England May 12. Miss Faithfull has signed a contract to return here in the Fall and deliver a course of lectures.

THE LAST WEEK of Maggie Mitchell's engagement in the Grand Opera-house opened May 7 in the presence of a fair-sized assemblage, which enjoyed this little lady's impersonation of Jane Eyre, which was repeated 8, and is again to be given at the matinee 9. "The Little Savage" is billed for 9, 10 and matinee 12, "Fanchon" 11 and "The Pearl of Savoy" 12. Next week the Kiralfys' "Black Crook" Co.

THE TUNEFUL Charles M. Connolly, who has given the public a number of the most popular melodies now in vogue, has fitted up at 229 Bowery an office where he will make a specialty of writing and composing songs for the stage, teaching alike professionals and those who would become professionals, arranging songs, etc.

ERNEST STANLEY sailed for England May 1, in advance of the "Evangeline" Co.

DALY'S THEATRE is closed, and is to remain so until Tuesday night, May 15, when Theo and Grau's French-opera Co. begin a farewell season of seven nights and one matinee.

CROWDED HOUSES are at present the rule at Harry Miner's Bowery Theatre, where the amusement-programme this week is furnished by A. H. Sheldon in a new sketch entitled "Have You Seen Mrs. Langtry?" Minnie Belmont, serio-comic; Charles and Ella Jerome, burlesque songs-and dances; Arthur Dunn, songs-and-dances; Jeppe and Fanny Delano, sketch-artists; Belle Clifton and Louise De Luisi, skipping-rope dances and character-changes; Billy Carter in banjo solos; Murphy and Mack, Irish character-artists; Jennie Dunn, serio-comic; Murphy and Shannon, German comedians; the Wesley Bros., song-and-dance team; Valjean, with his trained doves; and Frank Lewis, topical vocalist; and "Murphy's Wedding," by the Comedy Four, assisted by other members of the company, brings the entertainment to a satisfactory conclusion.

THE NATIONAL THEATRE was filled to its utmost capacity on Monday night, when the usual change of programme was noticeable. The dramatic feature of the current week is C. F. Nichols in the leading role of "Sharkey, or the Shadow Detective," and the variety olio includes the absurdity of "Mulcahey's Racket;" Carrie Wilson; Carroll and Walters, who perform on a variety of musical instruments; J. Martin, pedestal-clog, Irish jig and reel dancer; the Big Little Four in songs and eccentricities; the Four Shamrocks in "The Workingman's Strike;" and Fred Roberts, vocalist, won approbation.

THE LONDON THEATRE had its full share of patronage on Monday evening, when "The Two Johns" Combination began a week's engagement. The entertainment was opened by the O'Brien Bros., gymnasts; followed by Annie Devere, vocalist; Sheffer and Blakely, negro specialty-artists; J. W. Myers, baritone; J. C. Stewart, John Hart, John Robinson and Lizzie Conway in the comical act "Eh! What Is It?" Lester and Allen, specialty-artists; John F. Blint, imitation and character-vocalist; Wheatley and Traynor in their clever representation of Irish life; and the laughable afterpiece of "The Two Johns," which brings the performance to a satisfactory close.

THERE WAS a fairly good audience at Miner & Canary's Eighth-avenue Theatre on Monday evening, May 7, when the following new people appeared: James S. and Katie Edwards in their sketch entitled "The Same Old Story;" La Petite Ada Melrose in a selection of songs; Murphy and Morton in Irish songs-and-dances, with "Nelly and Rosy" as their strong card; Miss Minnie Lee, a songstress ever welcome to the patrons of this house; Griffin and Rice, who in song-and-dance are certainly a strong team; Master John Doud, a youthful exponent of the same line of business, varied with clever imitations of J. K. Emmet; Thos. A. A PARTY with capital is offered an interest in a dramatic company. See Mr. O'Connell's card.

AMATEURS.—The London (Eng.) stage has of late been overrun with amateurs, who have generally begun their career at matinees in the regular theatres. At a supper of the Lyceum Provident Fund in Freemason's Tavern April 11, at which Henry Irving presided, he thus alluded to the matter during his response to a toast. (He was speaking of the difficulties with which theatres have for the past few years had to contend.) "Really, in view of the extraordinarily large amount of amateur talent that is coming upon the stage, it might seem that the professional actor is in danger of losing his occupation. For this result I cannot help thinking the actors themselves are a little to blame, because of the support they have accorded to those amateur performances. We were all amateurs at one time, and all earnest amateurs hope to become actors; but, until they do become actors, I think it is a pity the actors should support them in the way they do by taking part in their performances." His words have created no little excitement in professional circles, and several actors have since ventilated their opinions in The Era, which also alludes in a sarcastic manner to the subject in the appended item: "Augustus Harris, ever eager to secure ability that has been matured by long experience, has engaged Mrs. Alfred Maddick, who has already made no fewer than three appearances on the stage, to play a prominent part in 'Youth,' to be revived April 28 at Drury-lane. With the engagement of a lady who has worked so long in the profession, both in London and the provinces, there is no cause to fear that the reputation of our national theatre will suffer." As the American stage seems to be afflicted with the same malady at the present time, these remarks have pertinent significance on this side of the Atlantic.

"NOBODY'S CLAIM," E. A. Locke's melodrama, is advertised as being elaborately fitted out for the coming season, opening Aug. 27 in Pittsburg, Pa. Jos. J. Dowling is the star, supported among others by Sadie Hasson, character-actress and vocalist. The proprietors of this attraction are Jas. S. Alexander and Thomas J. Kelley. J. H. Laine is the sole-manager. The scenes of this newly rewritten drama are said to be very fine and highly sensational. Several specialty performers will be introduced during the action of the play, and a manege horse, a performing bear, reindeer in harness and acting dogs will be among the features. The spectacular effects are particularly referred to by the management. Several dramatic people are wanted. From all that can be learned the above promises to be a strong attraction, which will be well heralded by plenty of showy and handsome printing made at The Ledger job-office, Philadelphia.

THE DRAMATIC FESTIVAL.—Our correspondent from Cincinnati writes: "At 11.30 P. M. May 6 the curtain fell upon the last act of 'Othello,' and the first dramatic festival was at an end. Its success financially was assured weeks ago; its success artistically is questionable. Of the leading artists who were engaged, but few played roles in which they had not previously been seen, and in some cases to better advantage. The greater portion of the work fell upon Lawrence Barrett, and he acquitted himself well. His voice was clear and seemed better adapted to the hall than that of any other, if we except Mary Anderson, who was also clear and audible in her lines. Her Desdemona was new to the public, and, while her impersonation of that part was received approvingly, yet in manner and action she appeared too heavy for the role. The Emilia of Clara Morris was fair, but she failed to make herself heard through the hall. Mr. McCullough in all that he did was painstaking and conscientious, and if he did one part better than another it was Master Walter. Of James E. Murdoch it may be said that, while better representatives of Marc Antony have been seen, his Hamlet was a scholarly and excellent performance; for, although he tried not to disguise his age by make-up, and although his gesticulation and business might be criticised, his reading of the lines was admirable. Nat Goodwin as the Modus and as the Gravedigger established the fact that he would be a valuable addition to the legitimate stage, while John A. Ellsler as Dogberry and as Polonius asserted his right to be classed as of the best. Of the general support, while it was good, there was nothing electric about it. Those deserving special commendation were Miss Wainright, Miss Forsyth, Louis James, E. K. Collier and H. A. Langdon. Of the scenery and appointments a sufficient description may be given by saying that they were without doubt the finest employed in any dramatic representations given in our times. The artists, Messrs. Waugh, Merry, Murray, Maeder, Weston, Cronin, Rettig and John and Edw. Thompson, labored zealously and long, and that they did well was proved by the plaudits of those who witnessed their work. The receipts are estimated at about $115,000. It may be that the committee who had the Festival in charge will endeavor to give one every year, but it is doubtful. There were many things lacking at the first which would make a second a complete failure."

THE CLIPPER BANJO, the new instrument just put in the market by Fairbanks & Cole, carries the marks of eight patent applications. The hooks are oval on the face and have a flat surface on the back where they come in contact with the hoop. The hoop has a groove at the side to hold the hooks. The metallic bottom to the rim, which strengthens it and proves quite ornamental, is made of German silver, nickel-plated. The sounding top is made of a tube set into the top of the wood rim and rising above it, being perforated at stated intervals. The makers claim by this latter a fuller tone and a freer vibration than in the old way of a solid wire or metallic rim. They also direct especial attention to the brace holding the neck and rim together, to the improved way of making holes in the tail-piece, and to the combination cap-nut and protector, in which there is no liability to twist the thread, and which, while it is ornamental, is also useful in protecting the clothes and to the screw-attached bracket. In workmanship and finish the banjo can certainly be admired, and to the ear it commends itself by a round, full tone.

The Ford-Belmer Novelty Company, including Bob Ford, Lester and Williams, John and Emma Whitney, Add Weaver, Nellie Parker, Russell and Magee, and Little Flora Walsh opened 7. The Grand Central was sold 5 by Thomas Miller of New York to Elisha W. Hydorn, police-commissioner, electric-light-man and large tenement property-owner of Troy, on private terms, subject to a nine years' lease of Manager Peter Curley, who rebuilt the burned theatre a year ago. Curley is the owner of Levantine's, Albany.

THE SEASON at Kernan's Monumental Theatre, Baltimore, Md., closes May 26. This year is reported as being a most successful one for the house, and Manager Jas. L. Kernan states that from the press and the public he has received a most decided endorsement, making his success personally very gratifying. During the recess this Summer a number of improvements will be made in the theatre. The stage will be reconstructed, new scenery added, a new gallery holding 1,000 persons will replace the old one, and a dress or family circle will be put in, with a seating capacity of 700, with new chairs, lights, etc. The reconstructed house will seat 2,300 people. Managers of combinations and attractions are referred to the card elsewhere, giving particulars. R. Fitzgerald looks after engagements here. Pavilion and outdoor amusements are wanted for Kernan's Summer Garden, Baltimore, which opens May 28.

ANNA FRANKLIN, serio-comic and change-artist, will be at the Park Theatre, Chicago, Ill, May 7, two weeks.

JULIA WILSON, serio-comic vocalist, is reported as having married a non-professional gentleman at Cleveland, O.

THE DU RELL TWIN BROTHERS, acrobatic song-and-dance artists, have just concluded a successful engagement of eight months with Pat Rooney's New York Star Combination. They have a sketch for the coming season entitled "The Elks' Social," introducing a song-and-dance, "The Twins," and a ballad, "The Sailor's Dream," which they have copyrighted. Manager Pat Rooney gives these performers a hearty endorsement. They perform in Providence, R. I., this week, and open at the London Theatre, this city, May 14.

AT THE HOWARD ATHENÆUM, Boston, Mass., Gus Williams closed a successful engagement May 5. This week M. B. Leavitt's Specialty Company is playing. C. L. Davis in "Alvin Joslin" 14.

THE MELROSE SISTERS receive an excellent recommendation from Harry Miner. They have been engaged for his Comedy Four Combination for the coming season. Ada Melrose was presented April 26 with a handsome gold bracelet suitably engraved.

GUS ADAMS, vocalist, is at his home in Rock Island, Ill., nursing his foot, which was badly crushed April 26 in Rockford, where he was performing with Wallace's Specialty Co. A heavy trunk fell on his foot.

NEGRO MINSTRELSY.

T. J. FARRON of Baker and Farron, Billy Courtright, now with Billy Emerson's Minstrels in 'Frisco, Cal., and George Wilson, now of Barlow, Wilson & Co.'s Minstrels, were in 1870 managing a troupe styled Farron, Courtright & Wilson's Minstrels, which made a tour through Colorado. Business was bad in the small towns, and the troupe collapsed. On reaching Arbourville, now called Conrow, they accepted an engagement at Ed. Chase & Arbour's beer-hall, which they fitted up with a stage and scenery and christened the Cricket Music Hall. They played there for three months, and then dropped away one by one.

SAM S. SANFORD will have charge during the coming Summer of the minstrel company on board the excursion-steamer Republic, which plies between Philadelphia and Cape May. He has engaged M. C. Sexton's brass band and orchestra.

J. H. STOUT, interlocutor and basso, is resting at his home in Philadelphia.

CARNCROSS' MINSTRELS closed at Ford's Opera-house, Baltimore, Md., May 5. Route: Newcastle, Pa., 7, Easton 8, Bethlehem 9, Reading 10, Harrisburg 11, Tyrone 12, Pittsburg 14, one week.

HAVERLY'S MASTODON MINSTRELS opened May 7 at Haverly's Brooklyn Theatre. The audience was large. The company goes to New York City 14, for two weeks. Haverly's "Merry War" Company next week.

THATCHER, PRIMROSE & WEST'S MINSTRELS occupied the Grand Opera-house, Cincinnati, last week. They did fairly.

HI HENRY'S PREMIUM MINSTRELS are billed in Bordentown, N. J., May 8, Burlington 9, Salem 10, Bridgeton 11, Millville 12, Vineland 14, Atlantic City 15, Woodbury 16, Mount Holly 17, Norristown, Pa., 18, Phœnixville 19.

HAVERLY'S NEW MINSTRELS continue in their prosperous career, under the guidance of Kit Clarke, and from all reports are doing a large business and giving a fine entertainment. The Iowa State Register of April 29 contains these remarks:

> The audience at Moore's last night packed the house, scores being turned away before the curtain rose, the attraction being Jack Haverly's New Minstrels. The company is a new one to Des Moines people, and all agree that it is a good one. The singing was charming, the music by far the best of the season, the comedians were splendid, the jokes were really new and good, and the receipts nearly one thousand dollars.

Their route is Springfield, Ill., May 9, Alton 10, Louisiana, Mo., 11, Kansas City 12, Wichita 14, Emporia 15, Topeka 16, St. Joseph 17, Lincoln 18.

AT THE GRAND OPERA-HOUSE, Rochester, N. Y., Barlow, Wilson & Co.'s Minstrels May 2, 3 had crowded houses. During the remainder of the week the house was closed, as it will be all this.

DR. GEO. W. HUNTLEY, who closed his fourth season as general-agent of Whitmore & Clark's Minstrels April 27, has been tendered an engagement with the same company for next season. He is to join Beedle & Prindle's Pleasure Party May 18.

WILL E. CULHANE advertises that he will introduce a very artistic minstrel specialty next season.

AN AMATEUR who has a number of specialties wants an engagement. See R. L. H.'s card.

INSTRUMENTAL PERFORMERS, vocalists and an end-team are wanted for Smith's New Orleans Minstrels. See J. H. Smith's advertisement.

BISHOP'S GEORGIA MINSTRELS closed at the Windsor Theatre, Boston, Mass., May 6, having played to fair business only.

CHARLES BACKUS ILL.—This well-known minstrel, who was seriously ill all of the past week at the residence of his brother, J. M. Backus, in Rochester, N. Y., is improving, and hopes to be able to rejoin the San Francisco Minstrels in a few days. Later advices say that his physicians advise him to abandon the stage. Should he decide to do so, Mr. Birch says that after the close of the present tour in Philadelphia the San Francisco Minstrels will cease to exist.

LEON is always one of the most attractive cards whatever company he happens to be a member of, and the appended notices of Barlow, Wilson & Co.'s Minstrels from Utica and Syracuse journals show that his business is as popular as ever:

> BARLOW, WILSON & CO.'S MAMMOTH Minstrel organization gave one of the best minstrel entertainments ever seen in Utica to a large audience at the Opera-house Saturday evening. There was not only no bad feature in the entertainment, but all was exceptionally good. In the overture the singing was excellent, and the jokes were new and funny. Leon was, as he always is, great, while his dancing was never surpassed. The entertainment closes with the laughable musical sketch "Langtry, Ben. Butler and the Jersey Lily." The company is certainly mammoth in numbers and talent, and their costumes and stage-settings are in perfect keeping with the excellence of the company. Frank Cushman's make-up as Butler was received with cheers.
> BARLOW, WILSON & CO.'S MINSTRELS appeared at Wieting Opera-house last night before one of the largest audiences of the season

KERNAN'S MONUMENTAL THEATRE,
BALTIMORE, MD.

JAMES L. KERNAN . . . Proprietor and General Manager
GEO. W. RIFE . . . . . Treasurer

SEASON OF 1883-'84.

The season at the Monumental, which closes on May 26, has been the most successful ever had in Baltimore. Night after night the theatre has been crowded, and the entertainments presented have received the unqualified endorsement of both press and public. All this, too, has been accomplished in the face of unusually strong opposition, both dramatic and musical, and the engagement at other theatres of stars of world-wide celebrity. That I have succeeded is not only gratifying to me personally, but it is an evidence that people are forming a taste for bright vaudeville entertainments which afford pleasure and relaxation after every day contact with work and business. The success has not only been a gratifying one, but a marvelous one, and unexcelled in the amusement annals of the Monumental City, as will be certified to by the attractions that have played at this theatre during the present season. During the recess many improvements will be made in the theatre, and my purpose is to do everything in the future to eclipse the success of the past. The stage will undergo a thorough improvement and be replenished with new and beautiful scenery. The depth of the stage, which is now 50 feet, with a length of 55 feet and an opening of 40 feet, will be reconstructed, so as to offer unrivaled facilities. It will be stocked with all the requisite appliances of the latest improved patterns, and, together with the superb stage-settings, appurtenances and art-scenes under the skillful supervision and immediate direction of MR. WM. H. R. FOSTER, the master stage-carpenter of the country, will enable me to promise all combinations, as well as my patrons, spectacular and scenic splendors rarely witnessed. I have completed arrangements to pay special attention to the mounting of spectacular plays, and give them as fine a display as can be had on any stage in this country. AN ENTIRELY NEW STRING AND BRASS BAND has been engaged, consisting of selected soloists, under the directorship of C. F. WARNER, the popular musical-director, late of Thatcher, Primrose & West's Minstrels, and it will lend harmonious beauty to the entertainments. The press of different cities speak of this organization as being the most proficient in the country. The galleries will be torn out, and in their stead will be erected

AN IMMENSE GALLERY, CAPABLE OF HOLDING 1,000 PEOPLE.

Below this will be erected a DRESS OR FAMILY CIRCLE, to be refitted with patent folding-chairs,

AFFORDING SEATING-CAPACITY FOR 700 PEOPLE.

The flooring will be pitched so as to afford a perfect view of the entire stage from any part of the Gallery or Circle. The auditorium, which is now considered the best constructed in the country, will be replenished with new chairs, lights, etc., and when completed will, together with the Gallery and Dress-circle, give the theatre a comfortable

SEATING-CAPACITY FOR 2,300 PEOPLE at the following popular prices: $1, 75c., 50c., 25c., 15c. and 10c. After years of patient effort, and in the face of many obstacles, the Monumental Theatre has now attained the highest pinnacle of success, and is justly entitled to the name of conducted on strictly first-class principles, and possessing all the requirements of modern ease and convenience, vieing in elegance and completeness in every detail with any vaudeville theatre in this country. I shall endeavor to present to my patrons and the public in general only the latest and most novel attractions, and shall strive to maintain that superiority over my competitors and fame as an amusement caterer that I have held in the past. I am, your obedient servant, JAMES L. KERNAN.

Will be pleased to hear from first-class legitimate combinations and novel attractions for the coming season of 1883 and '84. Please write at once, as dates are rapidly filling. Address as above, or R. FITZGERALD, 255 Bowery, New York.

KERNAN'S SUMMER-GARDEN, BALTIMORE, MD.,

will open for the season with a Six Days' International Walk, comencing at 12.05 A. M. MONDAY, MAY 28, with the largest field of renowned walkers that ever competed in a race. This will be followed by local and female champion walks and other athletic attractions. Would be pleased to hear from Pavilion and Outdoor Amusements. [8-1t] JAS. L. KERNAN.

ROPE-WALKING OUTDONE.
The Theurer Wonder No. 2. Greatest of all the Greatest Wonders on Earth.

THE ONLY MAN ON EARTH THAT STANDS WITH HIS HEAD ON THE HIGH ROPE, AND WHILE BALANCING IN THIS DIFFICULT POSITION MOVES A DISTANCE OF THIRTY FEET WITHOUT TOUCHING THE ROPE WITH EITHER HANDS OR FEET, COMMONLY CALLED WALKING ON YOUR HEAD.

I also do the Slide-for-life with my head on an inclined rope, the same as others do while standing on the rope with their feet. This act is protected by patented rights. Robbers, beware! Managers and performers, this is another ad. for you to call a fraud until after you have seen the act, the same as you did with the Theurer Wonder No. 1. In response to the many inquiries concerning my head-balancing on the trapeze-bar, would say that the explanation you read in the CLIPPER is correct. My bar is one inch and one-eighth in diameter. I do not use nor attach any head-plate or cup to the bar while doing my act. Yours truly, JNO. THEURER.

The Theurer Wonder No. 1, as explained in last week's CLIPPER, now with Williams' Manchester & Jennings Specialty Combination, can be engaged for July 4. Fairs, Picnics, etc. Open dates after June 2.

We, the undersigned, wishing to testify our appreciation of the kindness, social qualities and untiring exertions of our employer, MR. J. E. SACKETT, to make everything pleasant, agreeable and profitable for us while we have been associated with him, take this method of saying to our lady and gentlemen friends of museum life that nowhere that we have ever been engaged has time passed so pleasantly as at Mr. Sackett's different Museums. We can safely say that, should any engage to our manager, they will find that all his different places are just like homes—in fact, it is like one great family, with nothing ever occurring to mar the feelings. Wherever he may go, or whatever he may strive to do, he has our wishes that he may succeed. May his life be as pleasant and happy and as far from trouble as he strives to make those who are engaged by him. There is a golden motto, that One is Happiest When Those Around are Happy.

A CHALLENGE TO MEN-FISH.

I will bet Five Hundred Dollars that no man on earth will beat Prof. Blatt's record of remaining under water Four Minutes Eleven and Three-quarter Seconds, and come out of the tank without assistance at the expiration of said time. FRANK GREGORY, Manager St. Louis Dime Museum.

CARD OF THANKS.—I wish to return my most sincere and heartfelt thanks to the Managers and Performers of the St. Louis Dime Museum for the beautiful gold medal they presented to me after I successfully accomplished the greatest feat of my life, as mentioned above. I also thank Lena Le Blanc for the magnificent gold-headed cane she presented to me on the same occasion. I will carry both as long as I live with the greatest pride, and in remembrance of that great event. Very respectfully, [8-1t] C. P. BLATT.
